About the Group:

Two of the world's leading scientific membership organizations joined forces in 2010 to become the Society for Laboratory Automation and Screening. This united community focuses on advancing scientific research and innovation through laboratory technology. SLAS has a global purpose and mission that serves scientists, engineers, professionals, and students from many disciplines and industries. Within SLAS there are two sections: the Biomolecular Sciences Section and the Laboratory Automation Section. SLAS is a global organization that exists to provide forums for education and information exchange to encourage the study of, and improve the science and practice of, laboratory automation and screening.

About the Meeting:

The SLAS International Conference and Exhibition is the Society's flagship event, annually attracting 5,000-6,000 participants from around the world. Through a unique combination of education, access to innovative technologies via a robust Exhibition and intelligent peer networking, the SLAS International Conference and Exhibition delivers unmatched value for professionals and students looking to leverage the potential of life sciences discovery and technology.
