- Fenway Sports Group, the parent company of the Boston Red Sox, has formally notified the city of its intent to develop a 5,000-seat performing-arts center on the corner of Lansdowne and Ipswich streets near Fenway Park. Renovations will include a new function space with sweeping views of Fenway Park suitable for large groups and private events.

VI. Additional Developments

- Boston Properties has opened The Exchange at 100 Federal Street, a shimmering new heart of Boston’s Financial District comprised of structural steel and a glass pavilion functioning as a public gathering and event space, delivering a contemporary addition, responding to the form of the existing 37-story, 1971 office building (pictured).
- Simon Property Group will undertake a 10,000 sf expansion of Neiman Marcus, 30,000 sf 2-level glass atrium leading into Neiman Marcus, and 34,000 sf of restaurant space.
- Millennium Partners has reached a deal with the City of Boston to build a 750-foot office and condominium tower at Winthrop Square, though the project is still being negotiated due to shadows that will be cast on the Boston Public Garden and Boston Common.

- The BPDA has approved development of Congress Square. Related Beal plans to turn six office buildings into a boutique hotel, new housing, and office space along an entire city block of buildings in the Financial District, between Congress and Water streets.
- MIT has submitted a $1.2 billion redevelopment plan to the City of Cambridge calling for 6 new buildings along Main Street, including 4 buildings that would add 1 million SF of office and research space, 740 apartments for graduate students and low-income tenants, and a new home for the MIT Museum.
- Faneuil Hall Marketplace is proposing a dramatic overhaul of the historic property that would create a new boutique hotel and revitalize the shopping experience. The Ashkenazy Acquisition Corp. proposal would transform the crowded central food court into more open retail spaces, bars, and sit-down restaurants. It would add several glass pavilions for shopping and dining, and the South Market building would get a 180-room hotel.
- The Massachusetts Institute of Technology is planning to use the former Volpe Center site in Kendall Square to build up to 1,400 apartments and condominiums, along with office, lab, and retail space. The university will pay $750 million for the site and build a new transportation research lab on the 14-acre parcel.
- The BPDA has approved a $650M expansion of Boston's Landmark Center in the Fenway area, which will bring 550 apartments, new shopping and dining, including the first Wegmans grocery store in Boston.
- Developer Don Chiofaro received preliminary approval from BPDA officials to build one of the city's tallest towers near the New England Aquarium. City officials will propose to limit development at the garage site to 900,000 square feet.
- The Circle, a 218,520 square foot mixed-use development under construction at the former Circle Cinema site in Cleveland Circle, will feature a five-story, 162-room AC Hotel by Marriott and a six-story, 92-unit Waterstone luxury adult apartment community. The project will include a total of approximately 14,000 square feet of retail space.
- A 1.43 million square feet development was approved as part of New Balance's $500 million New Boston Landing real estate development project in Brighton. New Balance aims to create a 350,000 SF "health and wellness district," a 140,000 SF boutique hotel, 650,000 SF of retail/restaurant space, and three office buildings.
