Lucy Britt & Tyler Steelman “Effects of Confederate Monuments on Political Attitudes and Behavior;”
Debates around Confederate monuments and the laws in Southern states preventing their removal often center around concerns that, on one side, honoring the Confederacy is an affront to racial minorities, and on the other side, that the monuments are merely an expression of Southern heritage or honor soldiers who died for a “Lost Cause.” Despite vigorous public debate, the effects of the legal protection of these symbols on Southerners’ political attitudes and behaviors have yet to be empirically tested. Using a survey experiment, this project tests whether laws protecting Confederate monuments affect Southerners’ feelings of political efficacy, belonging in their community, and likelihood of politically participating. Darwin Day Lecture: Plasticity, Epigenetics, and Evolution with David Pfennig, Professor of Biology, UNC-Chapel Hill; Celebrate Darwin's birthday by joining us for our annual Darwin Day Lecture! Genes are widely regarded as the fundamental unit of heredity and source of all biological information. Yet many organisms can respond to changes in their environment by altering their features - during their lifetime - via ‘developmental plasticity.’ These environmentally modified traits can sometimes be passed to offspring in the absence of changes in genes; that is, acquired traits can be inherited ‘epigenetically’. In this talk, we will examine whether and how such environmentally induced changes to organismal development affect evolution. As we will see, research into developmental plasticity and epigenetics has major implications not only for evolution but also for human health. ncbg.unc.edu/

Your evening will begin with Uli's Raclette with hints of lavender and sipping our featured lavender cocktail and craft beers from Fullsteam Brewery on our outdoor patio amidst the warmth of our stone fireplace. A four-course lavender infused dinner highlighted by wine pairings chosen specifically to enhance every dish. The night will be serenaded by music from The Counterclockwise String Band! We offer our Lavender Inspired Dinners 3-4 times a year, but each one is unique and the menu changes every time to include locally sourced, seasonal ingredients that marry beautifully with our lavender. This dinner promises to brighten your senses, and warm your heart to the magic of culinary lavender! lavenderoaks.farm/
