THE LAKE WITH TWO NAMES

In a legislative twist straight out of a Southern comedy, a South Carolina congressman waltzed in with a bill in 1987, to rename Clarks Hill Lake to Lake Thurmond, in honor of Senator J. Strom Thurmond. Well, bless their hearts, Georgians weren't having it! Armed with signatures and grit, they launched a campaign to keep the name Clarks Hill alive and kicking. With Georgia Legislature backing them up like a trusty ol' pickup truck, the battle of the names rages on, with more twists and turns than a country road. The debate lingers on to this day with Georgian's calling it Clarks Hill

Lake and South Carolinian's calling it Thurmond Lake. In the midst of this name showdown, let's not forget the heart and soul of the matter – the recreation that makes this lake the beloved gem of both states. Clarks Hill Lake, also known as Strom Thurmond Lake, is ranked as one of the ten most-visited reservoirs in the United States. The 71,000 unspoiled acres of water and 1,200 miles of glorious shoreline is a premier outdoor water destination for out-of-town visitors and locals alike. The US Army Corps of Engineers lake is one of the largest man-made lakes, East of the Mississippi.

AUGUSTA CANAL HEADGATES

(706) 868 - 3349 || 3300 Evans To Locks Rd

The Augusta Canal National Heritage Area interprets the story of the coming of the Industrial Revolution to the American South. Built in 1845 as a source of power, water supply, and transportation, the Augusta Canal channeled the Savannah River to power cotton mills and other factories beginning in the late 1840s. During the Civil War, the Confederate Powder Works gunpowder manufacturing complex was built along the canal; many more textile plants and industries followed in the late 19th century. Today the Augusta Canal is the only fully intact American industrial canal in continuous operation. Although none of the textile plants are still in operation, their hydroelectricity plants still operate to generate electric power using the canal's water; in fact, Augusta's municipal water system still draws from the canal. No longer a major industrial area, the waterway is now a popular recreation destination where visitors enjoy land and water trails for paddling, hiking, and cycling. The headgates of the Augusta canal are located in Columbia County's Savannah Rapids Park. Visitors can stamp their National Park passports at the historic lockkeeper's cottage, now serving as Columbia County's Visitors Center.
