

How to Plan a Dolled-Up, Excessively Pink Barbiecore Vacation This Summer

Make your summer full of rosy-hued bliss.

By Opheli Garcia Lawler

Updated on 7/13/2023 at 3:54 PM

Courtesy of Warner Bros. Pictures

This summer, Barbie will be arriving in theaters everywhere on July 21. But, if you need more Barbie vibes than just the one hour and 40 minutes of Greta Gerwig's genius—perhaps an entire week of your summer—consider planning your own Barbiecore vacation. It's a mixture of being an adult living in real life mixed with the fun and fantasy of playing with Barbies. But this time, instead of building a Barbie Dream House that you spent six months begging your mom for, stay in an ultra-pink cottage, castle, hotel, or villa.

For those of you not in the loop, Barbiecore can be defined as the aesthetic and overall vibe that the Barbie universe emits. You can find the #Barbiecore trend on TikTok, where you'll see videos of how to pull off the look: lots of hot pink, glittery eyeshadow, funky prints, and general “in paradise” energy. And while the specifics of the Barbie film plot are still under wraps, it's clear from the trailer that Margot Robbie's embodiment of Barbie in Barbieland is effervescent, bubbly, and bright. Doesn't that sound like the ideal vacation?

Courtesy of Blue Water North Carolina

Sea No Evil Beach House

Emerald Isle, North Carolina

Set up right on the beach, this vacation home is perfect for big families. With a cotton candy pink exterior, six bedrooms, a hot tub, and all of the creature comforts you could possibly need. This is the upper middle class bliss every career Barbie was hustling to achieve.