The bell rings as third period finally comes to an end. You pick up your books and head for the door. Upon leaving the classroom, you are met by a great horde of students, swarming through the hallways as they make their way to their next classes. Having to be somewhere yourself, you join the passing crowd, walking in unison with the people surrounding you. From within the group, your perspective changes. What originally appeared simply to be a single passing crowd is now revealed to be a more complex series of individual students, each coming from a different beginning point and each heading for a different destination. Looking around, you notice people of different shapes and sizes, all from different cultures and backgrounds and each with different talents and interests to share. You begin to recognize that you are unique, with your own feelings and ideas to express, with your own dreams and aspirations to pursue. And yet, as you walk on, you realize that despite your difference, every step taken becomes another step taken by the crowd, that each person is another element of a larger whole, that you and everyone around you are, in fact, ONE.

IN THE BLINK OF AN EYE

ANTICIPATION, impatience, yearning…and then it finally arrived: Prom! Hours upon hours went into planning, organizing, and preparing for what may be the most memorable evening in a teenager's high school career. Not only did the school make preparations, but the students did as well. Girls embarked on a seemingly endless search for that perfect dress, while the boys tried to come up with plans for a night the girls were dreaming about. Then the night passed in the blink of an eye and was soon a memory.

For months, the student council planned for the 2004 Prom. Regarding the decision to hold Prom at the John G. Shedd Aquarium, senior David Cavalier said, "The junior class wanted to do something unique and memorable to make prom special this year. When the administration approved the Shedd, it was a great opportunity to do just that!" Student Council had to overcome several concerns about cost. The total cost for Prom at the Shedd, excluding post-prom, was between $80,000 and $90,000. This number was huge in comparison to the $50,000 that Prom cost the previous year. The junior class had to raise enough money to pay for buses, which, in past years, were paid for by the PTSA. Another difficulty in planning the evening, according to senior Timothy Balgemann, was getting ticket prices low enough so people would buy them. "The worst part about planning was the price, but we got over that." Not to mention, the dance attracted a record number of attendees. Student Council originally planned to accommodate for no more than 700 people, but were soon surprised to find people swarming to buy tickets on the final day of ticket sales. Student Council member senior Amira ElShareif said, "I think everyone was so excited about Prom being at the Shedd because of all the publicity. We talked about it all year so people were really excited." On the last day, the bookstore ran out of tickets because Student Council had only given them the 700 tickets. ElShareif said, "There was so much confusion. We called the Shedd and they said they could hold up to 1100 people, so that was good. Then we had to call the bus company and make sure they could get more buses. It all worked out in the end."

Indeed it did! The night passed almost without any glitches. Senior Andrea Spisiak was one of the unlucky people who were on bus ten when it broke down just outside of York. She said they waited in the Commons for some time while administrators tried to have the bus fixed. The students finally left for the Shedd and arrived about forty-five minutes late, around 8:20. Regardless of this unfortunate incident, however, the night proved to be both memorable and enjoyable for all. Spisiak confirmed "Despite the disappointment of bus ten, it was still fun."

Graduates Brian Guimon and Jaclyn Hauser were named York's Prom King and Queen for 2004. The evening proved to be a wonderful memory for everyone who was a part of it. The fact that Prom was at the Shedd simply added to the awesome experience of the evening. Graduate Jessica Levee said, "The Shedd was definitely a nice place to go, but I think it matters more who you are with and what you make of the experience." Graduate Joseph Lindsay concluded, "This is the stuff that fairy tales are made of!" - Meghan Kenny

Coming as MANY Leaving as ONE

NORMALLY, the home football field is lit up with bright lights shining over a Friday night game and the stands filled with hundreds of screaming fans, cheering on the good old York Dukes. But on the day of graduation, the atmosphere on the field was much different. Instead, the stands filled with anxious family members and friends waiting for the graduation ceremony to commence. Furthermore, instead of bright, shiny lights, the hot sun was beating down on everyone. In spite of the heat, smiles mixed with a few tears as mothers and fathers watched their children prepare to take their final steps toward graduation.

Then at 2:00 p.m., after what seemed like forever, a familiar song began to play: Pomp and Circumstance. The audience stood up as they watched their children, dressed in the traditional cap and gown, walk onto the football field to take their seats.

After the processional concluded, the ceremony began with a welcome statement by Dr. Linda Yonke, which was followed by student speeches given by Kathryn McHugh, Joseph Lindsay, and Hilary GrayThe speeches were followed by a number of musical performances. The most important part of the day, however, was the Presentation of the Class of 2004.

Andrea Budlencik described the excitement in the air by saying, "I could see everyone as they came off the stage and I've never seen so many happy faces. Everyone was so friendly to each other – it was a really great feeling."

For some, graduation is a day that students have been yearning for ever since they first walked through the main doors of York on freshman day. But for many, graduation symbolized an ending, a conclusion to everything that has been built up to this point in their lives.

As Sheila Jung described it, "Graduation was a great way to end our experiences at York. The music, the speeches, and all of the people were unique to our class."

The 584 students who walked across the stage on Sunday, June 6, 2004, were filled with an overwhelming mix of emotions. Each and every one of them coming from different paths, each having a different experience in high school, each having different memories.

However different the lives of each of these graduates may have been up to the point at which they left their chairs accompanied by Pomp and Circumstance, there is no doubt that they walked into York on freshman day coming as many, and finally left as one: the York Community High School Graduating Class of 2004. – Suzanne Ekblad

Summer

FREEDOM! When students walk out of school and get into their cars on the last day of school it suddenly hits them- school's out and three months of sleeping in, tanning, vacations, pool parties, and beaches lay ahead! Then the question arises: "What will I do with all this free time?" Whether they spent their summer on the run or enjoying lazy days at home, summertime was the best way for people to let go and forget about the stresses of the school year.

Some saw summer as an opportunity to travel with family and friends. Sophomore Edie Carney was lucky enough to go to Georgia for Younglife camp. "My cabinmates and I all got so close, we had tons of fun and met some really cute guys!" said Carney. Others, such as junior Jessica Masella, took a short break from her relaxing summer routine to fly down to Orlando, Florida, for an extreme cheerleading competition. "It was fun to go on a 'mini vacation' and spend four days with my teammates," said Masella. A weekend at a friend's vacation house was another popular getaway option for students this summer. Senior Lisa Varchetto said, "My friends and I went up to my lake house in Delaven, Wisconsin, during a few of weekends this summer. We just relaxed, tanned and met other kids our age."

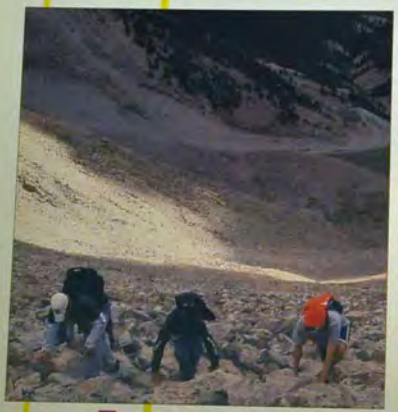

Some people saw summer as the chance to earn some extra money. For instance, junior Jessica Emerick dedicated four hours every morning to her summer job. "My parents made me get a job this summer, but it paid off when I realized that I had plenty of money to go shopping."

June, July, and August were all about staying up late, sleeping in, and recovering from nine tedious months of high school. Most of all, students enjoyed the abundance of free time that summer provided them. - Jorie Ganser

PLAYING games of hide and seek after school, kids rarely ever know what everyone else is doing...WORKING!

From scrubbing the inner depths of a toilet to serving ice cream with a cheerful song, York students continually worked hard for the money. They worked so hard, in fact, that senior Megan Cruse could not help but notice that they were beginning to develop "sweaty pits, stanky breath, and bad tempers."

Work not only provided students with not only that cold, hard cash that they dreamed of, but also a series of powerful, life-lessons. "I love my job because I get to learn how people have different needs and how to deal with all sorts of customers," explained senior Timothy MacKenzie about working at Abercrombie and Fitch. "I also learn that people can be pretty mean sometimes."

In addition to learning about life's many intricacies, these busy bees found that working let them become better human beings. Senior Jordan Murphy claimed that her job allowed her to become more in touch with her inner-self. "Since working at Curves, I have become a fitness guru," said Murphy, "Feel the chi, REPULSE the monkey!" Senior Erin O'Shea, a rec-station director, helped watch over kids whose parents were not home after school. The two years she worked as a director she grew to look forward to working every day. "The kids have that innocence and don't have a care in the world. They just go out every day, play, and make the best of it."

Though peeling their bodies off of their warm, comfortable beds on an early Saturday morning may not have been their first choice to start the weekend, students weren't stopped from earning their bling bling. Regardless of the type of work performed, students had the benefit of learning something every day. They strived to work hard, and whistled while they worked. - Niall Martin

We've Got SPIRIT HOW About You?

"WHEN the moon hits your eye like a big pizza pie, that's amore." Italian music to match this year's homecoming theme, "That's Amore," played through the halls during spirit week. Students participated in homecoming week festivities by dressing up for each spirit day and partaking in a series of lunchtime activities. The hallways looked as if they had been invaded by the cast of Pirates of the Caribbean on Tuesday, as students painted beards on their faces and patched up their eyes for Pirate Day. Students expressed their creativity further by dressing up for the other spirit days, including Pajama Day, Profession Day, Inanimate Object Day, and the popular Green and White Day. Junior Jacquelyn Rustleberg said, "Green and White Day is the best, because everyone gets really excited for the football game and has a lot of fun."

Every year several seniors compete for the title of "King/Queen of the Couch." This year's winners, seniors Michael Porter, Niall Martin, Jonathan Schroeder, and Sean Callahan made history as they became York's first ever "Kings of the Couch." The winners got front row seats on the couch to the homecoming football game and a free Portillo's dinner. Schroeder said, "Now that 'King of the Couch' is over, we have nothing else to live for."

This year's homecoming game will be remembered for many years to come. In a close, hard-fought battle with Willowbrook, a last minute touchdown by senior Michael Bennett won the game by a score of 40-37. Senior Claude LeRose said, "We were confident the entire game, but the great support from the fans really gave us the extra push we needed to win." When the clock hit zero, a swarm of fans, decked out in green and white, rushed onto the field to celebrate. Junior Shannon O'Connor said, "It was the perfect ending to a great week." - Caroline McNally

When the Moon Hits Your Eye Like a Big Pizza Pie That's Amoré...

HOMECOMING: that time of year again: when the chatter about dresses and dates filled the hallways during passing periods; when girls wondered who would ask them to the dance and guys figured out how they were going to pay for tickets and dinner. Scheduled for the first Saturday of October, York's 2004 Homecoming was definitely one to remember. The football game on Friday night, during which the Dukes beat Willowbrook 40-37 in an astounding finish, brought spirits up and put everyone in a great mood for dancing and socializing the next evening. Junior Jenna Silver joked, "After last night's game, it's hard to not have amoré!"

To prepare for the coming night's festivities, members of Student Council spent their Saturday morning creating decorations for the commons and cafeteria. A huge balloon arch was created, along with Italian-themed décor. Having the dance in the cafeteria for a second consecutive year, StuCo knew what factors to take into consideration to make the night as enjoyable as possible. "The thermostat is turned down to 60 degrees so to avoid another occurence like last year's rainforest," noted junior Alicia Rizzo. The more comfortable atmosphere inside the cafeteria and commons allowed students to thoroughly enjoy a night of dancing as they lost themselves to the beat of the DJ's music. "The speakers were booming and my booty was grooving," commented senior Garret Koehler. Adding further description to the night's festivities, senior Timothy MacKenzie said, "There were people everywhere you looked. Everybody was dancing and having a great time."

When all was said and done, this year's Homecoming dance provided students with an opportunity to enjoy three fun-filled hours of dancing, photos, snazzy attire, and good laughs with friends. All who attended agreed that it was definitely a night to remember. - Kara Nottelmann

DUKES at WORK

HERE at York High School there are many students who participate in activities that many times go unnoticed. These students put in countless hours of work for the good of the school, or maybe to give themselves a little extra help with academics or athletics. They are sometimes overlooked because there is no "Bookstore Helper's Homecoming Game" for the students who sell us our books and dance tickets; there is no "Pack the Math Lab" night for regular math lab visitors, and there is no "Weight Room Alumni Night" for those young men and women who stay after school to improve their physical fitness or train in the off season of their sport. The work these students do is important to them as well as to the school, and they deserve to be recognized. - John Shepard

through THICK and THIN

"What is a friend? A single soul dwelling in two bodies." -Aristotle

PHILOS, the Greek word for friend, also means wisdom, devotion, and love. A common passion, a familiar face, a bond of trust; no matter the trait, a friend will be the one who can make you laugh, make you cry, and everything in between. Some last for a year, some last for a lifetime, but for whatever length of time, the enjoyment of being around that one person who can make the world seem sane again, is unforgettable. Throughout high school, friendships are made, continued, and sometimes broken; whether since pre-schoool or since last year, the camaraderie the feeling is all the same.

Senior Kelly O'Malley explained, "A friend is a person who asks you how you are doing and actually cares about the response." Whether they are doing the listening or doing the talking, the mutual trust of a friend made all the difference in a time of joy or a time of crisis. The trials of high school were demanding on anyone, let alone when personal dilemmas came into play. Such were the times when a friend stepped in to take your mind off of reality, make you laugh and find some fun trouble of your own. Junior Jenna Silver said, "A good friend is someone who will bail you out of jail at two in the morning. A great friend will be sitting right next to you." Her spin on companionship makes the best of friends agree. There are some tales to be told, as well as those that probably should not, while both are remembered just the same as a common link that made many all the better.

If it was time to talk about the latest embarrassment, that impossible homework assignment, or the new special someone, there was s nobody else to turn to but the one who has been "trusted to help in whatever necessary way when the times were tough," according to senior Evan Rabens. When the going was tough, the tough turned to their friends for moral support. Whatever one's outlook on life may be, it should be supported by the confidence, spirit, and pleasure of the friendship found in many and the friendship found in one. - Ian Fletcher

You have to SEE it to BELIEVE it!

JUST bring it! That's the attitude York fans brought to the table this year. They added an element of excitement to every sporting event they attended, letting everyone know that they bleed green.

Al Pacino once said, "You got to see it to believe it." Such a phrase could easily be used to describe the scene at York, where students displayed school spirit that was hardly typical of average fans. The York community came prepared everywhere they went with faces painted, spirits up, and voices ready to cheer. Attending sporting events from every end of the spectrum, fans displayed support for their Dukes all year long.

For some students, being a fan served almost as an occupation. Hard-core fan junior Keith Kubiesa described his pregame routine: "I drink a case of energy drinks, run a couple of laps, do some push ups, and sing to train my voice for cheering." To some, being a fan also involved following annual rituals, as Kubiesa said, "At the Homecoming games, I always wear speedos and full body paint."

York's athletes shared great appreciation for their fans' support. "When all the students come to our games, it gives us a deeper reason to win in the game," said junior Justin Peacock. "Dedication is what makes a great fan and sitting in the pouring rain in thirty-two degree weather is what I call dedication."

Everyone in York's great community could have fallen under the "fan" category. Students, faculty, and even parents came to games to support their Dukes. While attending a York athletic event, fans yelled such chants as "D- Fence! D- Fence!" and Mr. Andy Barrett's infamous chant, "GO YORK! GO PLAY! GO WIN!"

Simply put, York's fans included people who valued school spirit over personal pride. They were the ones who truly understood what it meant to "bleed green." With faces painted and spirits willing to start an uproar, fans provided both athletes and spectators with additional incentive to get up for games. COME ON SNOWBALL Do Your THING!

"[illegible]ese's Pieces," "The Penguin Song," and "Ride the Pony" are only a few of the many songs that were chanted during Snowball weekend. From the first moment that students arrived at Camp Timber-Lee in Wisconsin on Friday to the final slide show presentation on Sunday, all Snowball participants were in good spirits. "The atmosphere was really great at Snowball this year," said senior Danielle Hlavacek. "We couldn't have asked for a better weekend."

Snowball activities included outdoor challenges, dance workshops, arts and crafts, a pop-culture trivia game, motivational speakers, and small group time.

Small groups each consisted of about seventeen people, two of whom were student leaders, and one adult leader. Each small group was given a country to go along with this year's Olympic theme. The groups met several times over the course of the weekend and discussed a variety of topics. The purpose of small groups was to focus on team building, getting to know new people, and gaining confidence in oneself. Sophomore Katelyn Heraty said, "Team building taught me a lot about communication and its importance in challenging group situations."

According to an overall consensus from Snowball participants, this year's speakers did a great job of connecting with and making an impact on their audience. The speakers included Tei Street, who talked about learning to love yourself; a group of AAIM presenters, who discussed the consequences of drunk driving; and York faculty member Mr. Charlie Kern, who spoke about controlling one's own happiness, enjoying the simple pleasures in life, and being courageous enough to let others know that you care about them.

One of the weekend's highlights involved the Busa African Dance Troupe. Even though there was not a dance this year, the Busa family taught students traditional African chants and dances. Junior Peter Rohles said, "They interacted really well with the crowd and got a lot of positive energy from everyone."

This year over three hundred people attended Snowball, the largest group ever in York's history. Mr. Charlie Kern said, "It was great because more people were able to hear the message that you can have fun and enjoy life without drugs and alcohol." - Caroline McNally

I HOPE He SAYS YES...

DRAMA. As described by sophomore Kathryn McGhee, "Turnabout translates to mean complete and utter chaos. There is always the 'Who should I ask?' drama, and then the 'Will he say yes?' drama. If you're lucky and get past those obstacles, there will be the 'Oh my gosh, he danced like an idiot!' and the 'Oh my gosh, he wore white socks with his black shoes!' drama."

Around the time of Turnabout, many York girls, like McGhee, dealt with issues rof whom to ask and in what cute or creative fashion to do so, while the guys thoroughly enjoyed the relaxing process of letting the girls ask them to the dance.

"I like Turnabout because I can just sit back and let the girls do all of the work. I don't have to worry about doing anything cute," sophomore Samir Chabra said.

Student Council planned the details of the evening. They booked a DJ, developed a theme, and decorated the commons with streamers and balloons.

Junior Alicia Rizzo commented, "It was a lot of hard work to do everything, but it was fun at the same time. I really liked seeing everyone having a good time."

Despite all of the hours of planning and pressure, everyone who attended the Moulin Rouge themed dance looked like they could walk the red carpet in Hollywood. The girls arrived in beautiful dresses, and the boys in nice shirts and ties. As the dancing began, the cafeteria was filled with fun times and blaring music. No matter which way one turned, there was another couple right next to you. It looked as if all the drama was worth it. – Amanda Roszel

What's Your Muse?

ART fairs, talent shows, and not to mention the amazing photography and fine art classes. What more can you ask for from the arts here at York?

The talent show was one of the popular events associated with fine arts. The planning for the show started with the audition process. "Many people try out in the beginning and we do our best to accommodate everyone possible," said Mr. Curt Merrill. Those who were selected to perform had a lot of work ahead of them. The two mandatory practices prepped them for their upcoming show by getting the act approved. These two practices however, didn't hold a candle to the out of school preparation that went into the short routine. But not just the talent show graced the halls of York during this week of artistic expression.

Classes for photo and the many different paints went on every day as the artists honee their skills. Junior Annelese Beckers described her watercolors class saying, "During the year we learn about different styles of painting and how to manipulate the paint to do what we want." All this instruction and hard work was evident when students displayed their work. The several art fairs held throughout each year have moved locations over the years, but the quality of the art has only improved. Photos and paintings adorned the walls of the Black Box Theater while students made pottery and jewelry then displayed on tables around the room. Senior Joseph Calderone explained, "We learn so many different styles and it's interesting to see the vast improvement from my first painting to my last."

However, music and painting are not the only artistic endeavors at York. Silk screening and graphic design classes add a new type of modern art to already astounding fine art classes. The classes use high-tech computers and silk screening technology to make custom shirts and cards. "It's an interesting class and uniquely different from all others that strive for academic excellence," said senior Sean Moore about his silk screening class.

On the back cover of every student agenda is the York vision statement outlining the school's committment to academic excellence, intellectual passion, and appreciation of beauty. At York, the fine arts certainly fuffill this vision by giving students a challenging forum to express thier creativity, thoughts, and feelings. - Greg Covelli

TOGA! TOGA! TOGA!

TOGA! The toga party in "Animal House" is legendary. Everyone wanted to have an invitation. It was the party of the year. Nobody could possibly know what was to come next, for everything occurred unexpectedly. Those at the party were seemingly transported from their normal lives to a time long ago, when togas were worn on a regular basis.

The toga, which can be plainly described as a gown, was the name given to the principle outer garments worn by the ancient Romans. Originally worn without any tassels or ropes, togas were usually wrapped around a person's waist and over one of his or her shoulders. Men traditionally wore white robes, because that was the color of the natural fabric.

It is truly impossible to recreate the atmosphere of the infamous toga party from "Animal House," but this year's student council took a crack at it. Doorways draped with frilly decorations and hanging streamers, as well as a cafeteria full of balloons, music, and cardboard cutouts of famous actors dressed in togas made this dance the place to be on May 1, 2004.

Students went all out as they dressed to match the toga theme of the dance. Graduate Thomas Kirby explained his process of dressing for the occasion, "I took a bed sheet, brought it over to my personal stylist, graduate Robert Rusteberg, and let him work his magic. He threw it over one shoulder. There was nothing helping it stay together; no ropes or safety pins. It was very authentic. I looked GLORIOUS! I felt free!"

Though the ancient Romans originally wore plain white togas, color was in no way lacking from Spring Fling dance. There were pink, purple, yellow, and even some tie-dyed togas moving about the dance floor. Some togas were not only colored, but patterned as well. "Some people were wearing their childhood bed sheets," junior Bethany Szczepaniak observed, "Some had sheets with trucks and trains, Bert and Ernie, Elmo, and airplanes."

Who Knows Where

MADNESS LIES?

A Look into the Mirror of Reality...

SITTING in the dressing room, applying the sticky brown paste to his beard, graduate Anthony Lopez glances at himself in the mirror. He wears a white wig and a grey beard and has numerous brown aging lines drawn in. He has been transformed from an eighteen year old high school student into an old knight, Don Quixote de La Mancha, who is trying to pursue an impossible dream: finding sanity where there is nothing but madness. This is the theme of Man of La Mancha, one of the most performed play in the world.

Man of La Mancha is about a man who, believing that he is a knight in shining armor, vows to introduce virtue into the world. Such is his dream, which society tells him is impossible to achieve.

For two long months, fifty-nine York students put over two-hundred hours of hard work into the spring play performance. With two casts, a full lighting and sound crew, an orchestra, and a stage with a working drawbridge, Man of La Mancha proved to be one of the most impressive plays the York community has ever seen. "It was the most professional show I have ever been in," said Lopez. "The level of dedication on the set and the quality of the casts' performances were incredible."

As part of such a phenomenal event, students were acquainted with the basics of theatrical production. "There are no small parts," said director Ms. Rebecca Marianetti, "The students learned that character development is an essential quality to acting and that theater can change your perspective on life." However important these lessons may have been to theatrical life, work on the play set introduced students to several other revealing issues about everyday life. "Man of La Mancha taught us that we can create our own reality and that dreams may be impossible, but you should still follow your quest," said Ms. Marianetti, "Life can be unkind and unfair, but we are in charge of our own destiny."

Perfectly summing up his spring theater experience with a strong sense of passion in his eyes, graduate Matthew Kovich concluded, "I learned that every human being has such limitless potential and that if we wish for our world to be a better place to live in, we need only look towards our dreams. Therein lies all the wisdom we seek." - Maureen Ohler

FLAMES were everywhere. Complete DARKNESS! Young children SCREAMED their heads off while running for their lives and the lives of others. No, this wasn't a part of Dungeon's and Dragons, it was Relay for Life.

Relay for Life served as a walk-a-thon fundraiser for the American Cancer Society. Hundreds of people walked with their teammates around York's track for twelve consecutive hours to raise money for cancer treatment and research.

Outlining the track were thousands of white paper sacks filled with sand and lit with candles, which provided participants with a constant reminder of the devastating effects of cancer and the many people who have suffered from it.

Hundreds of names flashed up high on an enormous TV screen looming over the crowd, displaying names of people who have died or have been affected by cancer.

The York community supported disease treatment and research during the Laugh for Life benefit, which served as a fundraiser for AIDS prevention in the Zambian village of Fisheni. "The money is used to stop the transmission of HIV from mothers to babies. It is wonderful to think of all the generations of children we have helped tonight," said senior Ian Fletcher, committee chair leader. Over five-thousand dollars was raised by York students to donate to this worthwhile cause.

Originating from Africa, the Busa family provided attendees with exciting musical entertainment, as they represented their culture with interactive drumming and dance. "Busa rocks my world," exclaimed sophomore Abhi Patel during the performance. One member of the Busa family, Atiba Y. Jali, was wowed by the enthusiasm of York's students. "The spirit you guys have is awesome," he said.

Chicago's Second City improv group provided additional entertainment for the evening, as they performed a series of humorous improvisational sketches which included much involvement from members of the audience.

Havoc in the Roman Times...

LOVE IS IN THE AIR

TAKE a roman slave, add a master's young son, throw in a beautiful courtesan and out-of-town prents. Add it all up and get havoc in the Roman times. That is what the cast of A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum dramatized when they performed this comedic musical.

The story begins in Roman times when Pseudolus (played by graduates Amber Robinson and Anthony Lopez) s enslaved by Senex (played by senior Michael Aguirre and graduate Drew Bridgman) and desperately wants his freedom. Senex and his wife have to leave the family for a few days, leaving Pseudolus in charge of their young son Hero (played by sophomores Timothy Scott and Kevin Mojziszek). What they don't realize is that their son has fallen in love with a beautiful young courtesan and wants to marry her. Hero promises Pseudolus his freedom if he will allow the marriage to take place before his father gets home. That is when the fun begins.

The talented young actors who performed this play spent many of their summer nights perfecting their roles. From incoming freshman to graduated seniors alike, everyone had to try out. From the part that they got they learned that there were no small parts, and everyone was equally important because someone else was always depending on another actor's next move or next line. "It was a play that depended on where everyone else was. Everyone had to be in the right place at the right time. That took a lot of practice" explained junior Katherine McCann.

Not only was it difficult to coordinate where everyone was while onstage, they dealt with the troubles of having a double cast. This meant that there were two people per role. "It was most challenging because it was confusing as to who was on which cast, and where each cast practiced because one cast would practice with one director in one spot one day and the next day it would change," said sophomore Amanda Perez.

Despite all the work that went into perfecting the production, it was a good change for those who performed regularly. Junior Danielle Albert commented, "This show had perfect timing for York. The last couple of shows were very powerful and tragic shows. Because this show was a comedy, it helped break the seriousness of the mood that was set from the other shows. It helped us loosen up and have a totally awesome time. The best thing is laughter, so hearing the crowd every night burst out laughing really boosted our self esteem and made the cast realize that we had put on a fabulous show."

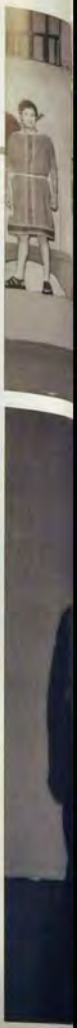

With all the work that was put into this play, it was a great way for incoming freshman to meet upper classmen and to get a hold of the ropes, while it was a last chance for the graduated seniors to say goodbye to all those they met throughout the years. - Amanda Roszel

ELECTION! On the morning of November 3rd, Principal Ms. Diana Smith came over the intercom and answered the question many York students and faculty had been wondering throughout the previous night: "John Kerry has just conceded the presidential race to George Bush." This statement caused many reactions throughout the school, some of elation, some of resentment, and some of relief. Although only five percent of the York student population was able to vote, political opinions were still prominent in peer discussions. Many of the issues that were at hand affect students just as much as adults, such as the war in Iraq and a possibly ensuing draft, bans on gay marriage, rising costs of gasoline, unemployment, and education under the No Child Left Behind Act.

The broad spectrum of issues being discussed was not limited to only these topics, as many students based their decision of who they wanted running the country on moral and ideological principles. Freshman Caitlin Regan stated, "I would vote based on who the president would appoint for Supreme Court justices, because they do not just affect our generation, but the next generations too." While some decisions were politically based, others were personally motivated, as junior Alicia Skoog said. "If someone could come over to my house and we could find common ground, and I could relate to them personally, like if they loved peanut butter, because I love peanut butter, then I would vote for them."

In the York mock election, run by the social studies department, any student could vote for candidates without having to be eighteen years old or registered. While the winner turned out to be John Kerry, the tallies were close, but not as close as the national election, which many said was decided by the state of Ohio.

Here in Illinois, a group of York students had the opportunity to meet Ms. Michelle Obama, wife of the Democratic National Convention keynote speaker and U.S. Senate candidate Barack Obama. She spoke not only about her husband's platform, but the process of campaigning and how the election affected her personally. Junior Max McClintock reacted, "She was extremely articulate and distinguished her own views, goals, and career from Barack's, which are more well known." Her presence was noticeably welcome and even more prized after Barack Obama won the Senate seat.

Although House of Representatives candidate Ms. Christine Cegielis and state Senate candidate Mr. Joseph Vosicky visited York as well, they did not obtain their hopeful seats in government.

The Crucible
Dancing With The Devil

"HAVE you ever danced with the devil?" Such is the question that the cast of The Crucible asked their audience during the fall play. This year's show wasn't just any production of Arthur Miller's The Crucible. The play's pre-show and intermission, during which the cast roamed about and interacted with the audience as if it were 1962, provided a unique element to the show. This was designed to introduce the audience to the mood and setting of the play.

The Crucible is set in 1692 in Salem, Massachusetts, a predominantly Puritan village where the infamous Salem Witch Trials took place. As the play begins, the audience is introduced to a group of Puritan women, led by Abigail Williams (played by junior Katherine Cobb), caught dancing and casting spells in the woods. To protect themselves from being accused of practicing witchcraft, the women agree to assist in a series of witch trials. Unfortunately, Abigail's contribution turns out to be corrupt. For instance, after having an affair with the married John Proctor (played by senior Michael Lemense), Abigail plots to kill Proctor's wife, Elizabeth (played by senior Sarah Wilber), and take him for herself. For unjustly accusing many innocent people of witchcraft, junior Katherine Cobb described Abigail as "not evil, but definitely deranged; she feels no guilt throughout the trials." As it turns out, Abigail's corruption is complimented by that of Thomas Putnam (played by sophomore Eric Miner), a greedy land owner who wants people to hang so that he can take their land. Miner used a Star Wars analogy to describe his character: "I'm the emperor and Kate (Abigail) is Darth Vader. She is evil, but I am over arching the evil."

In order to make the production work, cast members had to overcome many obstacles, including late-night practices. Describing one of her late-night practice experiences, sophomore Shanna Cardea said, "I got home one night and it was like eleven o'clock and I was like 'Holy Cow! I have a science project due tomorrow!' and I was up until 2:30 finishing it." The cast also faced difficulties with the set; the stage crew experienced many problems keeping the characters' lanterns lit. Such instances proved to be inconvenient, but did not interfere too much with the show's production.

Thanks to the play's outstanding makeup crew, cast members were able to almost completely transform into their characters. Serving as an important part of the play's production, the makeup crew attended every practice; they had to be taught how to apply heavy makeup to the cast. "Sometimes it doesn't matter if you're in the cast or not, as long as you are involved in the experience," said sophomore Jose Nateras. Sophomore Maggie Deady was extremely dedicated, overseeing the entire costume crew. A lot of the time, she had to alter or even make the costumes herself.

In the end, The Crucible proved to be a great experience for all involved. Senior Margaret Sotos said it best, "This play rocked! We worked hard and kicked some Puritan butt!" - Madeline Brodt

IT'S A BIRD...

IT'S A PLANE...

ON the night of December 11, 2004 superheroes, good and bad, attended York High School for a night filled with dancing, entertainment, and catching up with old friends.

This year, student council members found it easy to decide on a theme for the Winter Dance. Senior Claude LeRose explained, "We've wanted to do a superhero theme for a few years now, and this year just seemed to be the perfect year to do so." Though coming up with a theme was easy, decorating for the dance was an entirely different matter. Student council dedicated more than four hours of their Saturday morning to decorating for the dance. They filled the cafeteria and commons with a large and colorful assortment of streamers and balloons.

Though student council was in charge of planning the night's events, the Winter Dance would not have been possible without the contribution of teachers chaperoning the dance. However, these dedicated faculty members did not seem to mind giving up their Saturday night to monitor the dance. "It's always fun to talk to the kids," said chaperone Ms. Robin Rogers. Also willing to contribute to the night's events, chaperone Ms. Alisha Bhimji explained, "I enjoy seeing kids have fun. It reminds me that kids are more than just the students sitting in the desks of a classroom."

When 7 p.m. came around, it was not York students who appeared and walked through the door, but superheroes. Some of the superheroes spotted in attendance that night included Superman, Quail Man, Poison Ivy, and the Power Rangers. However, the most popular superhero at the dance proved to be Santa Claus and his adorable little helpers.

In The Round

York actors shine

THEATER lights go down, the audience surrounds the stage. In the tradition of Greek ampitheaters, the winder play was performed "in the round." A quiet energy also surrounds the stage. This energy is the result of intense weeks of preparation in a drama of Shakespearian tradition.

York's actors came together to put on a captivating performance of Tom Stoppards tragic yet humorous play, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead. Based on two characters from Shakespeare's Hamlet, the performance provided by lead actors, seniors Michael Aguirre and Sarah Wilber were meant to come across as alternately confused and deeply involved in philosophical conversations. Although the characters had difficulty remembering their own names, where they were from and the people they met were the only things that seemed to matter. This contemporary comedy provided the audience with many laughs, pearls of wisdom, and left them with many of life's lessons. The cast in this performance had a palpable chemistry. Clearly they bonded together during tiring practices that started weeks before the production and continued even outside of school. Senior Courtney Knysch said, "The cast was phenomenal and everyone worked really hard, including Mr. [John] Forsythe who was a genius."

The York students in this drama were radiant and captivated the audience with their talent and skill. Senior Soiree:

The Beginning of an End

OVER! Done! Finished! What better conclusion to the last stressful finals ever at York High School than Senior Soiree? As senior year reached the beginning of its end, seniors forgot about classes, college applications, FAFSA reports, and tuition costs. Instead, they focused on what is most important: the friendships they have created over their past three and a half years at York High School.

Seniors walked into the Diplomat West on the night of January 20 with an air about them. They had confidence and were proud to be part of the graduating class of 2005. No one cared about who played football or who was part of the chess team. Instead, they all looked forward to what would come over the next few months, and they were filled with a rush of emotions. They felt happy, yet sad; excited, but nervous; invincible, yet completely and utterly terrified.

While everyone else ate, seniors Michael Porter, David Cavalier, Matthew Babcock, Niall Martin, and Tyler Cruse became the entertainment in the Mr. Duke Contest. "I thought it was really good that they did the Mr. Duke contest while we ate. It kept the night moving and was fun to watch while we ate," senior Erin Nelson said.

Following dinner, the seniors headed to the dance floor and created even more fond evening memories. "The most memorable moment for me was during the last song of the night, when all of the seniors got in a big circle," said senior Bryan Smith. "It reminded me of a huge football team!"

Commenting on her Senior Soiree experience, senior Jessica Lambert said, "The night really brought the senior class together." That it did. Indeed the night was one to remember. The senior class of 2005 left the Diplomat West that night with a new attitude: they were prepared to cherish every last moment of their final days at York. HaTricks & Three Pointers

DON'T you ever just want to participate in a sport without having to worry about how to beat your next competitor or having to fret over an opportunity to go to the state meet? This year, many students found it fun to just play and have a good time without having to deal with added stress.

The Intramurals program at York provided students with a chance to participate in sports for pure enjoyment of the game. The young men and women who participated got to play in a competitive environment without having to deal with the pressures that are typically associated with a school sport. The Intramurals program was not very well known by York students, but it served as an excellent outlet for those who participated. "It's a great way to form friendships," said junior Patrick O'Toole. "I've met people that I wouldn't have met otherwise. That's one of the really awesome things about intramurals."

In addition to intramurals, students were provided with a chance to participate in the York Hockey Club. Hockey has long been regarded as one of the most difficult sports in existence. A hockey player must be able to move on the ice at top speed, while maneuvering a small black puck with his stick, and also cooperate with his teammates in order to get the puck into the opponent's net. These aspects of the game are not easy, though they were challenges Hockey Club members faced nearly every day.

Throughout their season, participants of the Hockey Club practiced, drilled, and flat out worked to be the very best team that they could be. With great teamwork, physical and mental strength, and the dedication of all its members, the York Hockey Club managed to put together a very successful season. The boys spent a great deal of time together and their friendships will never be forgotten. They Let The Racquets Do the Talking

IT was a beautiful Saturday morning, sunny and breezy. It was a perfect day to be outside, but this day was different. Graduate Alice Song would not be spending this day outside, because this was the day that she would be competing for the state championship. She proudly put on her uniform and slowly tied her gym shoes. She felt the smooth metal of her racquet as she took it out of it's case. This was Song's routine as she prepared to represent York at the state tournament.

During the season, Song was a standout player on York girls' badminton team, as she placed first in more than one varsity invitational. "She's been on the team for four years and is absolutely amazing," said junior Kimberly Neidhardt. Occasionally playing doubles with Song, graduate Sarah Tiesenga proved to be another one of the team's most highly skilled athletes.

Song and Tiesenga were not the only contributors to the team, for every single person was highly skilled, agile, and quick. The team worked really well together. They practiced every day after school and on Saturdays. The girls' practices were full of grueling drills and scrimmages, but definitely prepared them well for competition.

Overall, the girls' badminton team gave it their best shot and experienced great success. "We definitely came together during the season," said senior Sarah Tiesenga, "The team was really great and so much fun." The girls' worked together to come together and be the best they could. Strikes

You're out!

FRESHLY cut green grass, raked dirt and brushed bases stand out in the field. Clad in stripes and high socks, the batter steps up to plate. Holding the bat in his hands, he is given the power to overcome his presented obstacle: the pitch. It could be a fast ball, a change up, or maybe even a slider. The pitch is made. It's a curve ball, but it didn't throw these Dukes.

Introduced as the Dukes' new varsity head coach in 2004, Mr. Bradley Sutter brought to the team valuable experience and excellent coaching skills. His first year as varsity coach went well, as he made efforts to shape the team to become more competitive.

Knowing that team chemistry is an essential element of success, the Dukes did all that they could to come together as a unified team. "At first I was nervous about the team makeup, because there was a mix of juniors and seniors," said graduate Brian Arenz, "however, over the tough tryouts and following practices, we really grew together as a team."

In addition to challenges regarding team unity, the players had other curve balls thrown at them. "We had to overcome much adversity due to injury," Mr. Sutter said. Injuries to key players, like senior Thomas Dillon, caused the team to suffer a bit of a setback, but the team got through the tough times and came together to produce a record of 4-7. In achieving such a respectable record, the team achieved its goal of becoming a more competitive force in its conference.

BOYS' GYMNASTICS: INDIVIDUAL EVENTS, A TEAM EFFORT

INSIDE the large gymnasium stood a tall, lanky boy, with his brow dotted with sweat and his hands freshly powdered with white chalk. He could hear his heart pulsing in his ears. His stomach fluttered as his number was called. This was it: his final chance at glory. The sweat dripped into his eyes, but he didn't even notice the salty stinging. He stood tall and awaited for his signal. He took a running leap and the rest is just a blur.

These feelings of total excitement, angst, nervousness, and anxiety were so strong on May 14th and 15th, 2004, that you could cut the tension with a knife. After a round off, a flip-flop, and a double back, graduate Mark Eakley gracefully landed at the state competition in Barrington, Illinois. Graduate Anup Alexander and senior Ryan Hageman also joined Eakley down state and experienced these feelings of emotional highs and lows along with him. Eakley competed on vault, Hageman on floor and high bar, and Alexander on pummel horse. The boys performed their routines to the best of their ability, but, unfortunately, they were unable to place in the top six.

The journey to state was not an easy one. The team practiced for three hours a day, six days a week, for a period of thirteen weeks. During their preparation, the guys focused on their individual events, whole team workouts, and strength conditioning. Graduate Kevin Williams described the practices as being "team-based psychological workouts," while senior Cameron Scolaro said that "practices could be best described in only two words: team cohesion."

Practice was rough, but the Dukes' competition proved to be the most difficult element of their season. "We have always shared a rivalry with Downers Grove North," explained junior Mark Monghan, "but we found it hard to compete against Lyons Township, just because they're known for having an excellent team." However, with seven seniors on the team (compared to last year's three), the Dukes entered competition with much experience, which provided the younger, less experienced boys with the confidence needed to perform successfully.

Aside from raw talent, the 2004 boys' gymnastics team managed to distinguish itself from past York teams. "This year, the boys have improved tremendously," said head coach Mr. Keith Matune. "The team had good leadership, great character, and they care for each other. They always strived to do their best, and no matter what odds you cross with that attitude, you'll always come up on top."

So the journey may have been bumpy, and the results were not exactly what they desired, but would they do it again? Monaghan said, "Of course I would. There's not a doubt in my mind that I would." – Maureen Ohler

Look, Ma... NO HANDS!

ADVERSITY. The girls' soccer team found itself in a difficult situation to open up the 2004 season. Due to the poor condition of York's activity field, the varsity girls were forced to practice and play all of their home games on the artificial turf at Elmhurst College. Such a transition presented an element of adversity to the team, which had aspirations of winning a conference championship. However, with hard work and gutsy resolve, the girls managed to overcome their difficulties and emerge victorious.

Determined to make her final year of York soccer a success, graduate Brittany Griganavicius said, "It is inspiring to know that as a senior you are the example. There is no one left to look up to except yourself and your peers."

The feeling of urgency expressed by Griganavicius was shared by just about everyone on the team, which remarkably consisted of ten returning starters from the previous year. To ensure their chances of having a winning season, captains and graduates Elizabeth Wilcek and Michelle Jorwic led the team in a rigorous preseason schedule that included preparatory practice sessions and an opportunity to participate in an intramural indoor soccer league. With the addition of the new weight room facilities at York, the girls extended their workout to include weight training for the first time in the Lady Dukes' history. Such pre-season action gave the girls a chance to not only expand their physical capabilities but also grow together as a unified team.

"One of our biggest strengths is team unity," Jorwic said, "We have girls from all ages who came together to create a team where everyone gets along and helps each other out. We are a perfect example of how team unity makes a team successful."

The team's remarkable chemistry was evident throughout the course of the season; however, the development of such required much patience and cooperation. Traditionally made up of junior and senior athletes, the varsity team of 2004 included five sophomores and two freshmen. Initially, players and coaches worried that with such a definite age difference amongst its players, the team would have a difficult time working together. To avoid such an obstacle, the girls decided to spend the weekend after tryouts at a team-building retreat in Lake Geneva. The experience provided them with a chance to develop a keen sense of team unity, as they became more personally acquainted with each other. Strengthening as the season progressed, the girls' appreciation and respect for each other allowed them to work well together both on and off the field.

After coaching the Lady Dukes to an impressive 3-3 conference record, Ms. Lindsey DiTomasso said, "I was very proud of our performance and development. The girls entered the start of the season a lot more prepared and fit than in past years, so we played very well."

Though the team did not achieve their goal of a conference championship, they did manage to establish themselves as one of the premier teams in the Chicago area. As the girls adapted to playing on Elmhurst College's turf, they soon began to realize that its professional size and speed gave them an edge over other teams, who had gotten used to playing on a smaller field. Such an advantage, in addition to an outstanding team effort, led by All-Conference athletes juniors Molly Griganavicious and Audrey Holmer, senior Erin Sahly, and graduate Wilcek, catapulted them to a 13-7-4 overall record; they took first place in the annual York tournament for the first time in four years and defeated such impressive opponents as Benet and West Chicago, the latter of which eventually went on to win the Class A state championship.

The success of the 2004 girls' soccer season brought great pride to the York community, for it served as yet another example of its athletes' ability to come together and triumph in the face of adversity.

Catching, Hitting, and all that Pitching

This is what Softball players are made of.

TEAM sports generally have a few specific qualities that define a game. Most would agree, for instance, that football is commonly identified with passing and tackling. In the game of softball, the two key elements needed for a winning season are both good pitching and good hitting. The 2004 girls' softball team exhibited these qualities with tremendous success as they worked towards putting together another winning season.

One of the team's greatest strengths was pitching. "Overall, pitching has really become the heart of our team," said Mr. Dave Williams, "A few years ago, a team would be lucky to find one good pitcher. This year, we have two."

To begin the season, standout pitchers graduates Kristen Barker and Kory Brunette lived up to expectations, as they combined to shut out seven of the first eleven opposing teams that they faced. Barker and Brunette proved to be a fearsome combination; each pitcher brought different s of talent to the Dukes' lineup. Graduate Alison Brav explained, "Barker pitches high and a little slowe Brunette, who pitches low and fast." The two girls alte pitching responsibilities during games, so as to co opposing batters by presenting them with two different of pitching in one game.

As if their pitching wasn't powerful enough, th also managed to produce a strong offensive unit. C varsity level alone, three players, Braverman, graduate Walsh and senior Kimberly Knutson achieved batting av that exceeded .300. These boys are the KINGS of the Court

GOOD weather meant the world to the 2004 boys' tennis team, because without courts of their own to play on, the boys were forced to practice on the outdoor courts at Butterfield Park. Consequently, if they didn't have a sunny day (preferably with warm weather), the team found it very difficult to practice. Yet, even though their preparation time was weather dependent, the boys did everything they could to ensure themselves a chance to compete in post-season play.

Outlining the team's goals for the year, coach Mr. Bill Sir said, "We want to be the best that we can be at the end of the season. Hopefully we can win the sectional team title and qualify the entire team for state."

To prepare the boys for competition, the team's practices usually consisted of warm up exercises, hitting and serving drills, and scrimmage matches between teammates. Some days they would play king of the court, during which they would challenge each other in matches and move around to different courts, depending on who emerged victorious. This provided them with the valuable experience of engaging in game like competition.

"Practicing as much as we did was a lot of work, but it was also a lot of fun," said junior Peter Rohles. "We did what he had to do to succeed and still managed to enjoy ourselves in the process."

Despite all of their hard work, the boys found themselves in a number of difficult situations throughout the season. "It's a challenge because we don't have much experience on the varsity level," explained graduate Thomas Sakash. The team lost several key seniors from the previous year. Lacking valuable experience on the varsity level, the Dukes looked for new leaders to step up and lead the team towards success.

READY, SET, WIN!

BANG! The starting-gun signals the beginning of another intense race. Runners from different schools round the bend of the track. The baton passed too quickly for eyes to catch. As the spikes hit the ground, the crowd notices that York is in first place, but no one is surprised; the boys' track team has already established itself as one of the premier programs in the state. In fact, the Dukes won all but two of their meets against opposing teams from around the area.

Although the outdoor track season did not start until mid-March, athletes started training in early January by coming in before or after school to run, lift weights, and even swim. During the season, the boys practiced everyday after school to prepare for their weekly meets. Practices began with a team meeting, after which the boys split into groups according to their field events. For example, sprinters ran separately from long distance runners and field event athletes. While coaches Mr. Stanley Reddell and Mr. Charles Kern encouraged team bonding, such separation during practice was necessary to keep athletes focused on their specific events.

After hours of preparation, the 2004 team was seemingly unbeatable, keeping the York stands packed with a mass of supportive fans. With such a hard working core of athletes, one might think that a winning record would have been enough to top off the boys' season. But captain and graduate Constantin Kari said, "The season started off disappointing". According to senior Sean McNamara, "The low point was probably when we lost to Hinsdale Central twice, by only one or two points."

However, like any great team, the boys bounced back to win the outdoor conference in mid-May. Certainly their season was not without its shortcomings, but team members kept their heads up and as a result, were rewarded for their hard work and effort. What made the season worthwhile for Kari was "beating Lyons Township in the 4x8 race during the Indoor Track season." After winning second place in sectionals the team progressed into the state meet and did exceptionally well. Expect nothing less from York's finest. - Kathryn Vilim

THESE GIRLS STAY ON TRACK

RIVALRIES in sports motivate teams to strive for greater success. They give athletes a reason to perform. These rivalries are even more dominant when competing against a rival often, and when your last competition ended in that rival's victory. The York Girls' Track and Field team understood this from an early season loss to Hinsdale Central at the indoor conference meet and was inspired to beat them and take first place in outdoor conference.

The girls knew how important it was to work hard throughout the entire season. They showed their resolve to work hard in their daily after-school practices, which often ended after six o'clock and consisted of long runs of up to an hour for the distance runners, as well as multiple timed 400 and 200 meter sprints for the short distance runners.

"The workouts are longer and more challenging than they have been in the past. Our coaches increased the training and intensity for this year," said graduate Jaclyn Hauser.

Practices were not limited only to tough workouts; the girls also spent a lot of time with their event coaches to work on form. The addition of two new coaches, Ms. Amy Peters and Mr. John Debowiecki, greatly increased the time each athlete received with a coach.

"Our new coaches really added something to this team. They seem to have connected to the girls in their events very well," claimed Ms. Annette Schulte.

A team's success does not rely entirely on just great coaching; peer leadership is needed to create a winning attitude amongst team members. The girls found such leadership in the standards of performance set by their captains. Captains and graduates Jaclyn Hauser, Laura Ogborn, Laura Bresnahan, Cassandra Yarbrough, and senior Danielle Hlavacek led by example as they combined as a powerful force for York in invites throughout the year. They were not alone, however, in their positive influence on the team. A remarkable group of underclassmen ran on the varsity squad, including distance standouts juniors Heidi Tucker and Molly Sullivan. They filled the gap created by several seniors who did not return from the previous year.

"It's incredible how well all the girls work together as a team. To have relays with freshman, sophomore, junior, and a senior all running together is amazing and even more so when they can win," proclaimed senior Kaellagh Cassidy.

The girls combined their intense work ethics with their team unity as they finished strong at the outdoor conference meet. Putting everything they had into the competition, they ran with the knowledge that it was their last chance to win the conference title. In the end, all the team's hard work and effort was finally rewarded as the Lady Dukes finished the meet in first place.

SAIL AWAY

SAIL AWAY

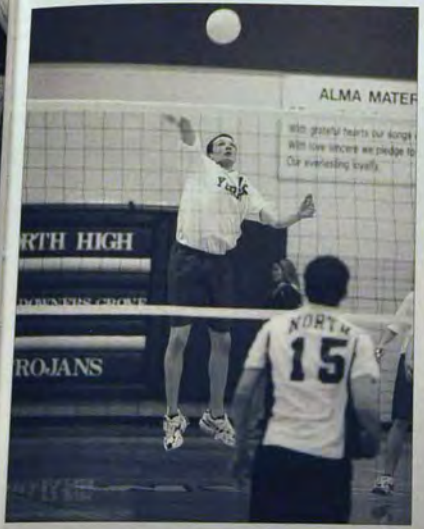

UPON walking into the new Green and White gym to attend a boys' volleyball game, one would not usually expect to hear the wailing voice of Enya singing her hit song "Sail Away." Surprisingly, however, this song was first on the boys' pre-game warm-up CD.

Consisting of mainly juniors, the 2004 boys' volleyball team was young but hardly lacking in experience. With several varsity players returning as starters from the previous year, the team was full of leaders who were willing to step up and take responsibility for the team's success. Such leadership was best exemplified by the team's three captains, graduate James Bonarirgo and seniors Michael Westendorf and Sean Wagner, each of whom played a huge part in the Dukes' success.

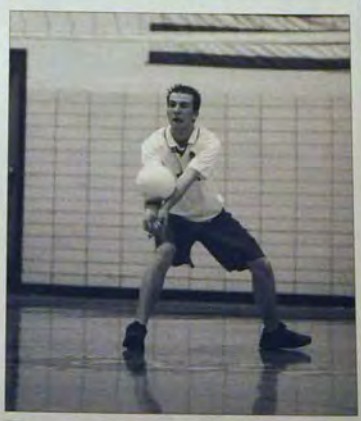

Not only were the captains leaders in a competitive sense, but they also served to make the year fun and enjoyable for the entire team. Senior Brent Centracco said, "We always worked hard in practice and games, but we still managed to enjoy ourselves at the same time."

Rarely consisting of any down time, practices were filled with technique exercises and training for specific positions. "We worked on a lot of passing and setting drills," explained senior Michael Westendorf. "We tried to get the basics down and build off of them to achieve greater success."

Sink or Swim, Think and Win

SPLASH! Water polo has evolved over the years into a complex, fast moving, action packed sport which combines elements of a variety of different sports, such as soccer, basketball, ice hockey, and lacrosse. It is an intense and grueling game that takes endurance, strength, and patience to play. Participating athletes must be able to tread water for long periods of time, while at the same time dodging aggressive opponents and dribbling the ball. The pressure on offensive is intense because players have a thirty-second time limit in which to score after gaining possession of the ball. If the team is unable to score within the given time period, the ball is then turned over to the other team. The fastet the team can get the ball into play, the more time they will have to create scoring plays.

The 2004 boys' water polo team responded well to the instruction of their new coach, Mr. Mark Forde. Senior Timothy Balgemann said, "It's really hard to start from scratch. We play with a different style than last year, but each day, as we learn, it gets easier."

Proving their true dedication to the sport, the boys put in many hours of hard work and practice. They gave up an extra hour of sleep in the morning to attend before-school practices, which were accompanied by additional afternoon practices. A typical practice involved stratching, treading water, agility drills, and intense scrimaging. This provided the team with the conditioning and training it needed to perform successfully in games, which took place two or three times a week.

All the boys' hard work and dedication paid off as they finished the season with a winning record of 13-10. Setting high expectations for themselves, the Dukes entered the post season with great drive and determination. Aided by the all-sectional performances of graduate Timothy Letizia and senior Tyler Cruse, the team advanced all the way to the second round of the sectional tournament. Living Life...

AQUATIC STYLE

CRYSTAL clear water is unnaturally still as the two competing teams line up on opposite sides of the pool, across the edge of their team's goal, waiting for the official to blow his ear-piercing whistle. The two teams dart in, sending the water into giant waves that flood toward the middle of the pool where the ball lies. The ball is picked up by a girl in green, who presses forward, passing the ball to an eager teammate. The shot clock flips on. Thirty-five seconds. York must quickly create an opportunity to shoot. She glances around, noticing her position in relation to her teammates. Fifteen seconds. Still no one open. The opposition closes in on her. Eight seconds. A clearing in the lower left section of the goal. She gets her shot off just as time runs out.

Although girls' water polo may seem like a carefree, leisurely swim in the pool, it is, in fact, a rigorous sport that requires a great amount of energy and work. Graduate Jane Nelson said, "It's a hard workout. You're constantly in motion, and during the game you have to watch for opposing attackers at the same time."

Day after day, the varsity and junior varsity teams practiced for two hours, five or more times a week. Each day they began with a 300-yard swim warm up, a period of treading water, or "egg beater", another set of 300 yards, a passing warm up and drills, which were designed specifically to accommodate for whatever the girls' needed to improve on.

The 2004 girls' water polo team was very different from the previous year. Unlike past years, girls' water polo was a "cut sport" this season, meaning everyone who tried out would not necessarily make the team. Over forty girls tried out for the team, a distinct increase from previous years. This boosted the level of competition in tryouts for both new and returning players. Once tryouts ended, everything else seemed to fall into place. The varsity and junior varsity team became closer than ever. "This year we had a very, very close team," said Mr. David Rafferty-Flatter," Closer from the beginning than any team I had seen."

Of course, the teams strived to stay competitive against tough rivals like Oak Park, Lyons Township, and Fenwick, who have consistently produced high-level teams year after year. The varsity team ended with a winning overall record of 15-9 and a 2-3 conference record, accomplishing what they had set out to do. Graduate Melissa Kowalkowski said, "These are some of the best coaches I have ever had. They are always instructing and helping the girls, teaching us something new. I just love the game." THE LONG GREEN LINE

CHAMPIONS.

GREEN flashes by again and again, ending with the crowd in an uproar. The champion Dukes showed their strength and dominance from their first meet, all the way to Peoria.

This year the boys' cross country team went 6-0 and took home their 24th state championship title. With 168 runners, 17 managers, and 2 world-class coaches, Mr. Charlie Kern and Mr. Joe Newton, York produced another dominating season.

Through the sweltering heat and the bitter cold, these athletes practiced day after day. Each practice consisted of an informational meeting, stretches, and a lengthy run that usually consisted of about fifteen miles. Senior Thomas Murphy explained their significance: "Workouts are brutal and Mr. 'don't call me Coach' Newton's rules are as strict as they are adamant, but the rewards of involvement with such a terrific coach and considerate group of guys are truly invaluable."

Motivation is essential to running, and although Mr. Newton and Mr. Kern served as motivation for the team, senior Michael Arnold also said, "My key to motivation is the other guys I race with everyday. I don't want to let them down."

According to Mr. Kern, this year's team had "a work ethic, commitment, and team togetherness that was greater than ever." This was proved by the remarkable consistency of the team's dominance.

This year was filled with first-place finishes in all of the team's meets, including the state meet. The state meet was held at Detweiller Park in Peoria, where hundreds of teams across Illinois gathered to compete. York dominated in the meet with 56 points, taking first in state for the 24th time. Senior Sean McNamara finished in 1st place with a time of 14 minutes and 33 seconds, followed by juniors Matthew Dettman taking 2nd and Eric Dettman finishing in 3rd place. In addition, senior Michael Arnold placed 26th, sophomore Nicholas Kuczwara placed 37th, junior David Montgomery placed 103rd, and senior Roger Billhardt took the 174th spot. Mr. Kern said, "This year Mr. Newton established a goal for York athletes to finish 1-2-3 at the state meet; this has never been done before."

The runners this year learned valuable lessons, all important but each unique. Junior Daniel Pizzi learned, "Never give up, always have a positive outlook," while senior Michael Arnold said, "Hard work beats luck and talent any day." Although every runner had a different response as to what they learned from this season, each one learned the result of hard work and sacrifice. - Rachel Arenz

BREATHE STRETCH SHAKE LET 'EM GO

SHE bends over and touches her toes, stretching out her body. Her heart begins to beat faster. Jumping up and down, she tries to shake off her nerves. She approaches the thick white line, positioning herself in front of it as she checks out her competition. The gun fires and she is off. Pacing herself, she runs in the middle of a pack that looks like cheetahs going in for the kill. Her heart races and her breathing is heavy as she slowly passes her opponents. She sees the tape. With victory in sight, all she can do is keep running. She spurs her heart and soul into the last hundred yards, breaking into an all out sprint. She thinks about and sees nothing but that tape. Three yards...two yards...one yard...here it comes...she does it! She wins the race. As the crowd goes wild, she knows that all of her hard work and dedication has paid off. Who is this girl? She is one of many. She is a member of the York girls' cross country team.

The Lady Dukes' training started in summer long before the school year began. Daily summer practices started at 8 am on the Prairie Path, where the girls conditioned themselves for the season by running anywhere from four to nine miles at a time. Their conditioning continued on into the school year, during which the girls endured strenuous, two-hour workouts, often running miles upon miles.

During the season, the girls' cross country team faced some stiff competition, facing such teams as Naperville North and Hinsdale Central. Though they suffered a tough defeat against Naperville North, who eventually won state, the girls worked hard and beat Hinsdale Central in a hard-fought race.

The Lady Dukes had to overcome a series of obstacles, mostly in the form of injuries. Many girls on the team suffered such injuries as back pain, shin splints, sprains, knee pain, and tendonitis, making it hard for the team to perform well. Junior Jenna Dunkle said, "We had so much talent, it was just the injuries that hurt us."

Even though injuries proved to be an obstacle, the girls worked together and did what they could to bring their team to victory. They placed second in conference and won regionals and sectionals, allowing seniors Vanessa Andrews and Kaellagh Cassidy, junior Molly Sullivan, sophomores Kara Andersen and Christine Caron, and freshmen Michelle Corbett and Angela Pisani to compete at the state meet, in which York took 17th place. The girls' success served as a final payoff after a long season of hard work and dedication.

The 2004 girls' cross country team had what it took to be great. They ran their hearts out every day, simply because they loved to run. Their passion for the sport is what made them bleed green. Their perseverance, dedication, and effort made the team what it was: amazing. - Lindsey Dyer

They'd Make John Madden Proud...

BLINDING lights and a chilled downpour swept the football field on Homecoming against Willowbrook. Victory was within sight of the fierce players and eager fans. With the help of these hopeful fans and dancing fools on the track, York's varsity football team was able to fight back from a ten point deficit and win their infamous Homecoming game. The fans' spirit poured out of them as they toppled the fence to the field. The feeling of unity was felt throughout the stadium as the players, fans, and coaches all fell into a mindless bliss of victory.

If their respectable record didn't speak for itself, head coach Mr. Terry Grider believes their actions did. "They were a better team than the record stated. It was a tough conference and I believe they could win other conferences," said Grider. A few notable players that may have helped win another conference were the team MVPs. On offense, senior Michael Bennett and junior Justin Peacock achieved this status while senior Brock Potter and juniors John Walsh and Ronald Britton earned the award on defense. The MVPs and dedicated players had difficulty trying to overcome their record. Senior Michael Bennett said, "It was hard to be considered for playoffs with a 2-3 conference record."

This year's team walked away with plenty of memories and lessons learned. The fans will remember the Homecoming game, but not like the players. "The last three minutes of the game we were down ten and we knew that we were going to win. We came back to win and all the fans rushed the field in the pouring rain," explained senior Michael Bennett.

Ironically, the players weren't the only ones being taught lessons. Coach Grider said, "The players re-taught me how to hang in there and keep trying and to never give up." One prime example of this lesson that the Dukes taught Grider was the OPRF game. Heading into the fourth quarter, the Dukes were down 3 points but came back to win once again. Senior Timothy MacKenzie explained that "they came out to play and so did we, but we wanted it more. At the end of the game, they just seemed to give up." The win over OPRF made the Dukes one game closer to making the playoffs.

After defeating Proviso West, the Dukes were able to enter the first round of the playoffs, where they played Lane Tech. "It was a very exciting experience," said senior Timothy MacKenzie. Unfortunately that experience would abruptly end after a tough loss to Lane Tech.

Undoubtedly, this year's team ended the season with a sense of accomplishment. Being able to persevere was one of their strong-points. Senior Michael Doherty wanted to leave future teams with advice. Doherty said, "Work as hard as you can and you'll become a better man. Also, don't take no guff!"

YOUNG though this year's boys' golf team may have been, but small in heart they were not. One might assume that the younger the player, the less experience they are. The boys' golf team proved that theory wrong. Five of the top seven golfers were underclassmen, and the Dukes finished the season with a 5-5 dual meet record and finished in fifth place in the conference.

There was some tough competition out on the green during the 2004 season. The best teams in the area were in the Duke's conference. Lyons Township, for example, won the sectional, regional, and conference championships. The Dukes narrowly lost to them by five strokes in conference play. Hinsdale Central, Glenbard West, Oak Park River Forest, Downers Grove North and Proviso West, teams in York's conference, were all extremely competitive. But the Dukes rose above the competition and defeated Glenbard West, Oak Park-River Forrest and Proviso West. Unfortunately, the boys lost on a fifth-man tiebreaker to Downers Grove North, but the men of York still completed the season with incredible performances from the entire team. They started the season with a 1-4 record and finished strong with a fourth place finish out of seventeen teams in the IHSA regional. The fourth place finish advanced the whole team to the IHSA sectional, where they finished sixth out of twelve teams. This showed that the Duke's goal to consistently improve and work hard as a team was a successful one.

The boys' golf team was a close-knit team. Captain and senior Samuel Rea helped them achieve this by providing lead leadership and stability. Being one of the smaller teams at York also helped the Duke golfers stay closer to one another during the season. As coach Mr. Jim Borel said, "Team chemistry is important and we had great chemistry this year."

Unfortunately, some of the team's goals went unmet. The team always sets the following goals for their season: constant improvement, conference wins, and advancing downstate as a team. They definitely improved, and even had a chance to win conference before advancing past the first round of the IHSA series. That is for next year's team, . Their youth this season means that the team will be fresh and experienced next year. - Claire Sheridan

PUTTING ON THE GREEN SCENE!

GOLF: a sport of finesse and sophistication; a sport commonly stereotyped as a man's sport. Legend says that the name of the game originated from an acronym for Gentlemen Only, Ladies Forbidden. The York girls' golf team proved the stereotype wrong. Although the team was smaller than in past years, the girls combined their talent and personality for a successful season.

Every day, the girls were hard at work practicing, led by captains seniors Claire Kubiesa and Suzanne Ekblad, as well as their coaches Ms. Barbara Tilden and Mr. Ron Chambers. Afternoons were spent either playing nine holes at the golf course or practicing technique at the driving range. Even over the summer, the girls were focused on the upcoming season. "Every girl put lots of work in over the summer and worked very hard to improve," said senior Claire Kubiesa.

Talent was not the girls' only strong feature. Their knowledge of the team's overall talent improved their morale and increased their confidence. This confidence was both a blessing, and a cause of stress. Junior Katelyn Kujawa recalled, "Knowing we were good was hard because it put a lot of pressure on us, and we could see where we could go if we did well."

One of the girls' biggest challenges was staying positive, especially after a bad game or even just a bad hole. "If you don't have a positive outlook, you won't play well," said junior Amanda Vavrinchik. Evidently, the girls were able to overcome their difficulties, as proven by their sensational season.

Throughout the season, the team competed in two different types of meets: dual meets and invitational tournaments. In dual meets, the girls competed against one other team and played a total of nine holes. The girls had a duals record of 11-0. During invitational tournaments, the girls played against a minimum of six teams and golfed on eighteen-hole courses. Their record for this style of play was also superb; they ended the season with two first place invitational victories.

All of the girls' hard work paid off in the end. The team placed second in conference after what proved to be one of their most successful years ever. Senior Claire Kubiesa and juniors Danielle Gibbins and Amanda Vavrinchik were eligible to compete in sectionals.

Overall, the golf team had a great season and the girls came together as a team. They played hard in every meet, and, as a result, had one of the best seasons in the Lady Duke history. This season, York Girls Golf Team proved that golf is definitely not a man-only sport. - Sarah Small

Kickin' it TO THE TOP!

SOCCER is not as easy as kicking a ball back and forth across a field. Forwards and midfielders have to run up and down the field passing and trying to keep the ball away from the other team while the goalie and the rest of defense have to protect the goal and prevent opponents from scoring. To play well a team needs to work as a whole, even if everyone is doing different things.

The boys' season started off rocky. Their first three tournaments of the year landed them a record of 1-0-2. They defeated Elk Grove 3-0, and tied with Glenbard East 1-1.

Midseason, the Dukes had an up and down record. They pounded Proviso West with a score of 9-3; Hinsdale South and Timothy Christian, both with victories of 4-1; and Downers Grove North with a close win of 2-1. Unfortunatly, four victories in a row were followed by five losses. Against Morton West the Duke's lost 4-1. They only lost by 1 point in the 2-1 and 1-0 games versus Lake Park and Benet Academy. They lost 4-0 against Hindsale Central, who at the time was ranked number one in state. Lyons Township defeated the team 2-0 in the fifth game of the losing streak.

In the end of the season, the boys went in to regionals by defeating Willowbrook 9 to 0. They lost their final game in a shootout with a score of 1-0 against Wheaton North. Captain senior and goalie Brian Visser stated, "The playoff game that ended my senior year was awesome because we went into a shootout even though we lost. It was the most fun I've ever had playing in a game."

The Dukes final record was 9-10-2. Keep in mind that the lineup included only six returning members from a team of 18.

The problem that resulted from the team's inexperience was solved with the good leadership of the seniors on the team. Seniors Brian Visser, Deian Kolev, Eric Dorner, and Tyler Cruse all helped create what the team became. All four were also awarded Academic All Conference. Just Keep Swimming... Just Keep Diving...

"GIRLS take your marks," the referee says followed by a long pause…BEEP…and the first girl enters the water. From the time each girl entered the water to the time they got out of the water, they worked for the one race, the one time, or the one opponent they had to beat.

The beginning of the year started off a bit rockier than they hoped. After many swimmers graduated, the new seniors had to step up and become leaders if they wanted to have a successful season. "This is one of the most focused groups. They can't wait to get into the water," head coach Mr. Dave Davis commented. "They would swim hard to see if they could do better. They always put more effort forth."

Unlike last year, there was a new approach to how the practices were run. There were more individual workouts in order to improve specific strokes or events each girl swam. On average, the girls would swim the equivalent of four to five miles each day. And that was after they ran at least a mile and lifted weights at 6:00 a.m. practice.

The girls' dedication, leadership, and focus were wh really shaped this year's season. By standing strong, thirteen gi

WHATEVER I FEEL LIKE, GOSH!

Eighty-nine degrees. It's a hot one. After two hours of tennis practice, one would think the coolness of the metal bus and vinyl seats would feel good against one's back. Some how it does not. Why? Because the coolness of the bus is just that: a bus. "This was one of the most frustrating things about being on the team," said junior Jennifer Williams. Due to the fact that York did not replace the tennis courts, it was necessary that these girls take the bus to and from practice at Berens Park. But the bus didn't hinder their performance.

After school from 4–6 p.m. the team practiced by warming up, taking advice from Coach David Williams, and then competing against each other. This helped them improve such skills as serving and volleying. Another skill the team improved upon was "focusing on the game with good strategy and confidence," said junior Becky Jenkins. This helped them to reach their goals of performing as best they could and winning sectionals. Another thing that helped them do well was team chemistry. Jenkins continued to say, "The team chemistry was awesome and we got along really well." They worked together and helped each other to succeed by constantly encouraging one another.

The girls encountered several obstacles due to their difficult schedule, as they played such dominant teams as Hinsdale Central and Glenbard West. Challenges such as these helped motivate the team to work harder, improve their game, and become more competitive in tough matches. The team's resilience gave freshman Elizabeth Budnik, juniors Megan Drahos, Becky Jenkins, Sara Mueller and Jennifer Williams, and senior Karen Russell the opportunity to compete successfully at sectionals.

Some think that tennis is a simple game of volleying a ball back and forth, but it is much more than that. It takes a lot of time and energy to do well. It takes muscle, hand-eye coordination, and perseverance. All of the girls shared these qualities, which proved to be such a vital part of the team's success. "Overall, the season was great because we had good team chemistry and improved a lot," said Junior Aneesha Suresh, "But we also had a lot of fun together singing Ashlee Simpson and quoting Napoleon Dynamite." - Lindsey Dyer

HUT HUT HIKE?
It's More Like
BUMP SET SPIKE!

WHAT do strong team unity and a competitive attitude bring? A season full of success. That is why 2004 proved to be such a great year for the girls' volleyball team.

Finishing out their season with a record of 19-17-3, the Lady Dukes won the regional championship for a third year in a row. Additionally, they took an impressive second place in the Hinsdale Central Tournament and were 3-3 in conference play. In order to achieve such successes, the girls needed to learn to come together as a team and trust and respect one another. In doing this, the girls really bonded and became very close. Senior Erin Bradbury said, "I love being able to play volleyball and, most of all, being able to play with some of my good friends."

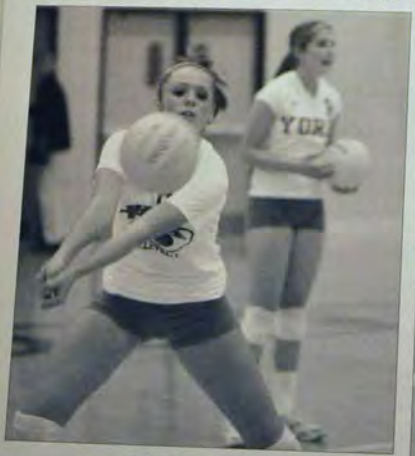

The team's success was partly due to the improvements of the returning members of last year's team. "We have a more diverse attack than last year and we have the ability to move the ball around more," explained head coach Ms. Jennie Georges. "The team is also larger this year and made up of a lot of different personalities."

To pump themselves for games, the girls' volleyball team did something known as "Sally Walker," which involves the girls circling together and singing a song. According to junior Kimberly Kaliebe, "We motivate ourselves and each other by holding pinkies and saying a few inspirational words to each other."

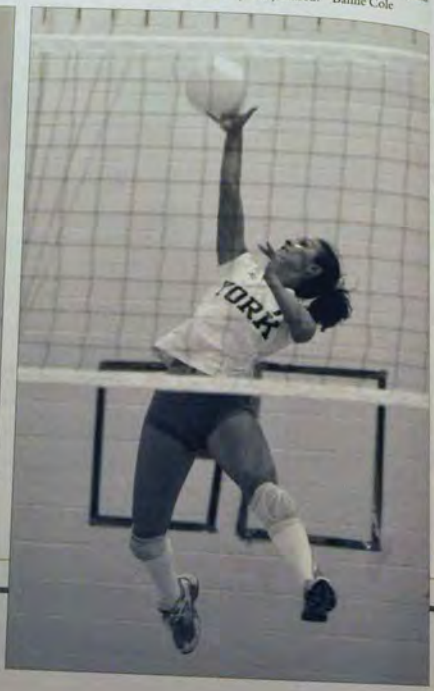

The team would not have been as successful as they were without enduring the two-and-a-half hour practices after school. Each practice consisted of a ten-lap warm up, stretching, footwork, passing drills, bump-set-spike drills, serving and receiving drills, and a team scrimmage.

Their hard work and efforts earned them several awards. All-Conference athletes included seniors Sara Little and Kerry Shields, while All-Academic Conference honors went to seniors Erin Bradbury, Sara Little, Lara Niersbach, Keri Osgood, Kerry Shields, and Megan Trant. As voted by their teammates, senior Kerry Shields was named the team's Most Valuable Player, while the Sportsmanship Award went to senior Megan Trant. Senior Lara Niersbach also earned recognition as the team's Most Improved Player.

In the end, the girls had a great season and learned a lot from their experience. "I have learned to trust my teammates more and have also learned that teamwork is the key to being successful," said senior Erin Bradbury. HIGHER than the RIMS

TEAM unity proved to be the key to success for the boys' basketball team. Finishing with a final record of 16-12; including a championship in the York Thanksgiving Tournament, a consolation title in the Jack Tosh Holiday Classic, and a run to the regional championship, the squad accomplished some goals that they did not expect to achieve.

Although the team got off to a slow start in conference, the squad grew accustomed to Proviso West transfers Robert Moores and Austin Hood. When the returning players meshed with Moores and Hood, York became a force to be reckoned with. After losing to both Downers Grove North and Lyons Township the first time around in conference play, the boys regrouped to defeat both highly regarded teams. Once state-ranked, Lyons never regrouped from York's one-point upset at LT. Although York struggled to hold leads at times, the perseverance they displayed in comeback wins against such teams as Morton and Fenton will define this group of young men.

Despite four long months of excruciating daily practices ending in a disappointing loss to Glenbard East in the regional championship, the boys' basketball team compiled one of the most successful basketball seasons in recent history. Senior captain Joe Lamplot said, "I can speak for all of my teammates when I say we have no regrets. Down the stretch, everybody on the team had that sense of urgency that all successful teams have." Returning several underclassmen that saw significant playing time this year, we definitely have next year to look forward to.

Lady Dukes
SHOOT FOR THE STARS

PRACTICING six days a week for two hours each day really paid off for this group of girls. Practices for these girls consisted of warm-ups, conditioning, drills, shooting, play by plays, and half-court and full-court practice.

Some of the challenges they faced were having only three seniors. They also had several new members who had never played with the team before. They overcame injuries, losses, and learned to play as a unified team. Junior Brittany James was one of those players faced with the personal challenge of an injury. "The worst part of the season was blowing out my knee and not being able to finish the season," said James.

The girls said that this year was different from the previous year, when they sometimes felt demoralized by losses. This year the girls stayed positive, even when facing a possible loss. The girls stayed optimistic and believed that they could win. Having talent and ability also played a major factor in dealing with the losses when they did have them. What kept things interesting was the fact that the girls never knew what type of game it was going to be. Would they lose? Would they win? Would they give it their all and never give up? No one would know until the girls hit the court and showed what they were made of.

Basketball was not just about winning to this group of ladies, but about meeting new people, learning discipline and dedication as well as having a great workout. One of the girls, senior and captain Christina Ricordati said, "I've also learned that regardless of the outcome, the game really should be fun and it's the people around you that make it fun."

All in all these girls had an awesome year. They made new friends and built new relationships with old teammates, had great workouts, overcame personal challenges, learned to deal with losses as well as celebrated wins, and they learned what it meant to be dedicated and to be disciplined. They will leave York High School with good memories and positive experiences from the team. "Being able to leave the program on a positive note and being able to leave some type of legacy is a great feeling," said Ricordati. - Stephanie Graziano

SOMETHING A LITTLE DIFFERENT

STRIKE. Anyone who has ever attempted to throw a strike or a spare knows that bowling isn't easy. As this year's team proved, bowling does not consist of simply throwing a ball at some pins. It requires strength, focus, and plenty of practice.

The most difficult thing in bowling is maintaining consistency. Being consistent doesn't come naturally, so the team spent much time practicing their form.

Once the season began, the girls connected instantly. Consisting of only eleven members, the team was small, allowing the girls to work closely with one another. Such a small team is unusual from many other sports, but it made for great team chemistry. "It's a very supportive team," said sophomore Jessica Lambert.

Though bowling is a very difficult sport by nature, this year's bowling team made it look easy, as their hard work and determination paid off with great success. Coach Dave Williams explained the key to his team's accomplishments, saying, "Bowling is self discipline. You have to conform to a certain form, and if you don't you can't succeed." With this mindset, the girls bowled their way to a season full of memories and achievements. - Madeline Brodt

A BALANCING Act

EVEN when exhausted both mentally and physically, the girls' gymnastics team pushed themselves to the limit. Illness, injury, and fatigue couldn't stand in their way, as they overcame these challenges with a new, rigorous conditioning routine. "This year's team brought with it gymnasts with a strong background in gymnastics," commented head coach Ms. Laurel Rohrback, "They are more motivated and their expectations for themselves are higher."

In their intense practices, the girls would start with stretching, followed by light conditioning and doing basic gymnastic skills on the floor. The girls would then split off into their different events: floor, vault, beams, and bars. The girls trained six days a week, as their practices were from four o'clock to six thirty after school on Mondays thru Fridays and eight to eleven o'clock on Saturday mornings.

"One of the biggest challenges the team needed to overcome was learning to work together and be one," said sophomore Kate Nishimura. They overcame this through working together in practice.

The girls' intense training and dedication led them to great success in competition. "To prepare for meets, we would "have a pasta party the night before where each grade level would bring a different food. It was a blast!" explained sophomore Anastasia Talarico. They did this along with a team cheer at the meet. Senior Laura Fischer also had her own way of preparing for meets, "I listen to music and visualize my routine before performing."

The girls have defiantly come a long way and learned much. Fischer said. "I have learned to become a better leader." The girls came in with a lot of talent and finished with even more, contributing to an overall successful season. – Baillie Cole

Putting Cool in the Pool...

One Day at Time

WHEN asked what one of the biggest challenges was for this year's 2004-2005 boys' swimming season, assistant coach Mr. Dave Davis gave this answer: "Getting all of the JV swimmers to do racing dives. At the beginning there were a lot of belly flops." The boys had evidence to prove of their belly flops with red marks and bruises on their stomaches.

The swimmers' days started with 6a.m. practice, as they either trained in the weight room or worked abs in the gymnastics balcony. After that, the boys would jump in the pool for a quick swim and go back to the locker room by 7:15. Junior Kevin Sullivan said, "It was hard getting everyone to come to morning practices for three and a half months."

After school, they were back in the water again, this time for a much harder and longer practice of two hours. The weekends were not all for rest. On Saturdays, there were 3 hour practices.

"The good thing about swimming," said head coach Mr. Mark Laurich, "is that, even though it's an individual sport, everyone has to work together to achieve anything as a team. It's been a very successful season. There has been great improvement, especially with such a large team."

The team's hard work paid off this year at sectionals, as junior Nathan Webb earned a trip to state for diving.

The most important thing about swimming this year was not always winning, but being on a team. Senior Timothy Balgemann said it perfectly: "Without a team to swim with and race against in practice, it would be impossible for anyone on the team to improve and grow as a swimmer." -Victoria Messina

Real Men WEAR Singlets

WRESTLING is debatably one of the toughest sports offered for students to participate in at York High School. This year, the varsity and junior varsity squads were made up of the top fourteen wrestlers in the school. Those select few and their teammates participated in rigorous practices every day after school, in addition to weight training twice a week.

The team was supervised by head coach Mr. Terry Clarke along with assistant coaches Mr. Gary Walker, Mr. Terry Grider, Mr. Matt Cochran, and Mr. Dan Urbanski.

The team competed in twenty-five duel meets and four major tournaments, as the boys went up against some very tough competitors, including their rivals Lyons Township and Glenbard West.

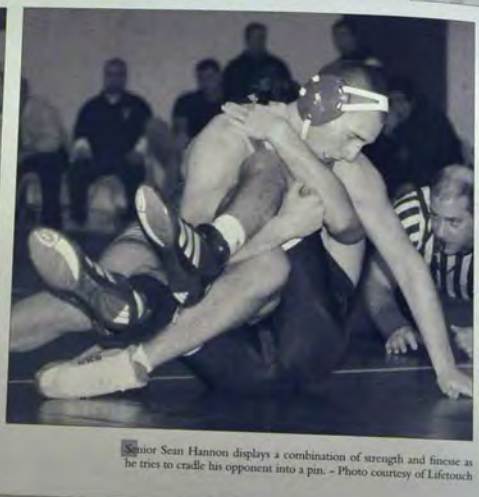

Though it was a young group, the team competed well under the leadership of team captains seniors Sean Hannon, Nicholas Parrish, Kevin Nester and George Noffs. Impressed with the team's senior leadership, Mr. Clarke said, "This year is looking pretty good. These guys take the sport seriously and we don't have to much goofing off."

This season proved very successful for the boys' wrestling team, as they performed very well at regionals and sectionals.

TAKING SPIRIT 2 THE NEXT LEVEL

SPIRIT, pride, and cooperation, are three things that keep the York cheerleaders dedicated. Unlike most sports at York, cheerleading practiced and performed almost all year long. The ladies practiced for competition or homecoming they practiced 2 to 3 hours a day every day of the week. At practice they stretched to begin with, then they worked on jumps and sit ups, stunting, jumping, dancing, tumbling, and yelling. It took practice to be able to annunciate and yell at the same time, after all their voices had to carry over a group of cheering fans, and the noise of an intense game. Competitions and homecoming were the biggest events that the cheerleaders prepared for. Both varsity and junior varsity went to competition. Their ultimate goal was to go to state, and they strived to be the best that they could be. The squad had another great experience when they were asked to perform a routine on then Channel 5 News (NBC).

Cheerleading isn't just practicing though; it is also a lot of fun. As junior Katherine McCann said, "I love stunting and competitions, but the girls on the team are really what make it all worth while. We're like a family, especially since our season is so long. We bond a lot." These ladies rely on each other to be at every practice and attendance at performances is crucial. If one girl is missing, the routine might not work, and the stunt may not go up. Each and every girl is important to the team. They all have specific jobs and duties. Cooperation is key. They must trust each other, especially during stunts when they are throwing one and other in the air.

Another important job of the cheerleaders is generating Duke spirit. It is one of the toughest jobs there is. No matter what the score or how important the game is the ladies are known for their amazing unity and spirit. It is their job at every game to get the fans excited, and make sure everyone, both the players and the spectators, are proud to be a Duke. - Kelly Hourihan

Green Mean Dancing Machines

IMAGINE having twenty best friends that spend at least three hours a day with one another and spend an unlimited amount of time together on the weekends. These best friends supported and believed in one another and had the drive and determination to focus on what was so important to them--dancing. This group of course was the York Poms.

The York Poms were a dance team that included a nine-month long season, much longer than most sports. They practiced after school every day to improve on their moves, style, and technique. Even before the football season, the Poms practiced long hours each day to prepare for the annual Homecoming Pep Rally performance. This past year's seven minute routine, choreographed by captains seniors Jessica Meenan, Shanley Luke, and Meghan Kenny, moved their audience by showing the squad's outstanding skills and their hard work. "It's just fun," senior Shanley Luke said.

For the first time in over twenty-three years, the York Poms qualified for Super Sectionals last year and were third in competition this past year, continuing their tradition in excellence. "The leadership on the team was astounding and came with tons of ideas and the attitude that they want to win and know how far they can go," explained head coach Ms. Michelle Fennessy.

Contrary to the Poms stereotypes, the dance crew worked hard all year round, developing new dance moves and original routines to wow their judges and throw their competition off their feet. Poms worked long hours to work on their dance skills by improving their tiptoe turns and high kicks demonstrated through their exhausting practices. Senior Meghan Kenny said, "We want our school to be proud of us." And proud we are. Go Poms!!! - Megan R. Cruse

No Trains No Planes Just Automobiles

EVERY high school student dreams of the perfect sixteenth birthday when you first get a driver's license. Then your parents give you the keys to your brand new car and you are off to pick up all your friends to go all the cool places that your parents had to drive you to before. Just as you pull out of the driveway to pick up your best bud, steam starts coming out from under the hood as the car slowly grinds to a halt. You think to yourself, "There goes my perfect day." Well, for members of the York Auto Club their perfect day just got better.

This group of auto enthusiasts met after school every Thursday because of a common passion: cars and how they work. Of the twenty-five to thirty- participants who showed up every week, very few could actually repair an engine or paint a car on their first day of membership. "Everyone learns really fast," said club vice president senior Nathan Polak. "The upper classmen create a great learning environment." Even if one of the upperclassmen could not answer younger members' questions, club sponsor Mr. Ron Robak was there to assist any club member with his vast knowledge of automobiles.

Club members were free to choose exactly what they wanted to do at each meeting. They could choose between such activities as repairing a friend's car or working on a project car, like the club's favorite '83 Buick Regal. Auto club is not all work though. According to third-year member senior Vincent Smith, "It's lots of fun, and we enjoy the work that we do every week." When they were not working on cars or talking about their projects, they had fun going on club field trips to raceways and auto repair shops.

A Circle has no corners...
But a friend at every curve

CIRCLE of Friends. These three words have a lot of meaning. This year's president of Circle of Friends, senior Bridget Szeluga, summed it all up. "Our goal as a student organization is to help the special education students by giving them an opportunity to be active participants in high school society."

Circle of Friends met once a month after school in a sponsor's (Mr. Andrew Bendelow, Ms. Marie Thielenhouse, or Ms. Roberta Stahelin) classroom to discuss what activity they were going to do for that particular month. After discussion, they organized and participated in that activity at the end of the month.

In September, members of Circle of Friends played dodgeball at Wilder Park. October's activity was supposed to be "Boo at the Zoo" at Brookfield Zoo, but was cancelled due to bad weather. Instead, they went to see "Shark Tale" at York Theater and had ice cream at Scoops afterward. They organized a Listening Party in November where everyone, including people who weren't members, were invited to eat snacks and listen to the new Jimmy Eat World album. During the holiday season, they went shopping for gifts and then came back to York to wrap them. Looking back on the year, sophomore Interpreet Kauldhar said, "My favorite thing to do was dodgeball."

When asked what activity stuck out in her mind the most, Ms. Marie Thielenhouse responded, "The kids loved bowling and they had such a great time. It was even fun just to watch them." Ms. Stahelin had the same idea. "All the activities were great because you could just see how much fun the kids were having."

Reduce Reuse Recycle

REDUCE, Reuse, Recycle. Three words that Eco Club takes to heart. This year, Eco Club took great steps to improve the environment. In order to do so, members involved themselves in a series of projects and traveled to different locations to become more educated on how to help the environment in the best way possible. The students in Eco Club shared a mutual interest in saving the environment. They helped to reduce the amount of pollution put into the atmosphere, recycled excess amounts of paper and other potentially wasted recyclables, and provided helpful services to the community. "Pollution is not the solution," explained Eco Club member junior Michael Marchese. "I think that all of the other students on Eco club would agree."

Eco Club partook in two main projects throughout the year. One was the recycling of paper throughout the school. Every week, the "Green Team" traveled throughout the entire school during lunch periods and collected the contents of recycling bins from every classroom. Eco Club also became involved in a program called "Adapted for Kids by Kids," in which they recycled crayons to give to children with Cerebral Palsy. This was done by melting down broken crayons and pouring them into a candle-like mold, which formed them into larger crayons that could be easily handled by handicapped children. "Melting crayons was a lot of fun, and it was for such a great cause," said junior Caitlin Freaney.

When they weren't serving the environment and community, Eco Club members took time to relax and enjoy the outdoors, going on a series of adventurous trips. Always popular, these trips included annual rock climbing and biking trips, a canoe trip down the Fox River, and a campfire on Halloween. These trips allowed the club members to get to know each other better, become educated about the environment and, most importantly, have fun.

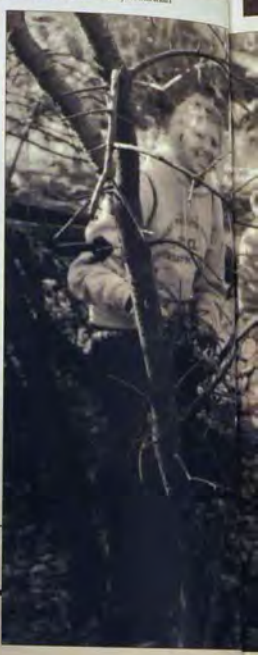

Eco Club members were busy throughout the year, constantly looking for new ways to improve the environment. Advisor Mr. Robert Blaus described the Eco Club members efforts and commitment as "awesome." They worked hard all year long, and all that they asked in return was that the rest of the community help them in their fight to save the environment by REDUCE, REUSE, and RECYCLE. - Kelly Hourihan

Redefining Character

One week at a time

CREATING a positive atmosphere was the main goal the members of First Class tried to accomplish with all the students and faculty of York. Though the administration took care of the school, the students made York a First Class high school.

First Class has always been an organization that speaks out for the common good of students. The club represented student opinions within the school and took those ideas to the administration for consideration. First Class members did their best to compile student's submitted ideas, focusing on those topics which promoted positive changes throughout the school. The committee also worked to improve communication within the school.

Every other Wednesday for twenty minutes, leaders from First Class visited classrooms and presented activities for other students to participate in. The activities were to help strengthen the relationships among the students.

At meetings First Class members focused on improvements to the school and to the student body. "We try to spread pride, dignity, respect, and a positive attitude among students, so their experience is more comfortable," explained senior David Robinson. "This way school can be a cool experience."

Members of First Class believed teamwork was the most valuable trait everyone should have portrayed. Towards the middle of the year, First Class members went on a field trip to the Black Box Theatre to promote teamwork and networking. "This club is one of the only clubs where I can meet a wide variety of people," explained junior executive board member Sonia Philip, who strongly believes in the morals of First Class. Freshman Sam Nayak exclaimed, "I don't just leave this club with friends, but friends who I will know forever."

Raise Your Right Hand and Repeat After me...

IMAGINE standing up in front of a judge and a panel of practicing attorneys with no notes in hand and only your memory to guide you in your opening or closing statement. This is just one of the many things York law team members have to face. Beside the pressure of having to present in front of judges, peers, and the opposing team, law team members must also appear confident and poised if they are to triumph over their opponents.

After new members are chosen for the team, both old and new members get to work preparing for the upcoming trials and State. Several days each week were spent by perfecting their positions. Opening and closing statements, witnesses, cross examiner, and direct examiner were the positions available. Members of the team truly did have a passion and dedication for law, spending an average six hours a week at practice alone.

Law team's season included three tournaments and then State. There were a total of six to seven teams in each tournament and twelve teams for State. In each tournament there were two trials for each team, one in which the team presented the plaintiff and the other presenting the defense. A typical trial started with the opening statements from plaintiff and defense, direct examination from the plaintiff, witness responses, cross examination from defense, witness responses, and finally closing statements. Throughout the trial each member was evaluated by a panel of six practicing attorneys and one judge. Each member could earn a total of ten points which were then added towards the group score. At the end of the tournament each team was given their scores and rankings. Besid receiving their scores each team member was given an evaluation of th performance, which they used to improve for the future.

Even though the majority of th top team was new this year as well as new coach, York law team was able to overcome many challenges this year. Just one of their many accomplishments this year was their win against Evanston and three-year State champs Timothy Christian in the St. Charles tournament. Another notable accomplishment was their second-place finish in a field of eighteen teams at the DuPage County Law Tournament. Senior Meghan Collin said, "This year, the law team members have really united. We have discovered the perfect method to integrate all our strengths and talents to form a successful and fun team." - Jenny Biegel

Students helping to solve today's

TACKLING THE ISSUES

problems for a better tomorrow

ALL twenty-eight Model UN members enjoyed tackling the issues that surrounded the world this year. Model UN provided students with a chance to meet new people and work together to solve real world-wide problems. The organization was also very convenient for its members, as meetings were held in the morning so as not to interfere with other student activites. Commenting on her experience in Model UN, sophomore Emma Van Reit said, "It is a great way to become engaged with an extracurricular activity and active thinking."

Model UN members traveled far and wide to conferences all over the United States countries. Before a conference, members researched their assigned nation and familiarized themselves with necessary facts and statistics. Sometimes involving nearly two-hundred students, conferences lasted up to twenty hours over a given weekend. The topics ranged from the AIDS epidemic in Africa to the war in the Middle East. Members could chose to be on various committees, such as the African Union and the World Court. Sophomore Samuel Sletten described a typical conference, saying, "All you do is bicker, but you have one heck of a time doing it!" Supervised by Ms. Angela Sebastian, whom members view as "brilliant and helpful", Model UN was fortunate enough to be invited to a conference in Canada, where Sletten received second place in his committee for being well prepared and expressing his argument in an articulate manner.

According to senior Alica Vurpillat, "Model UN informs students about serious global issues and how they impact the lives of the average American. It allows members to learn what other countries think and keeps them up to date with the happenings of the world." This year's Model UN members were dedicated, brilliant and sharp; they used all of their strengths to help solve the problems of today's world for a better tomorrow. - Claire Sheridan

STUDENTS in the National Honor Society went above and beyond the ordinary this year. In order to participate, members needed to complete a minimum of sixteen hours of service. When they were not serving their community, members were impressing their teachers with excellent grades. They were required to maintain a G.P.A. of 3.5 or higher throughout the first semester of junior year in order to petition for membership. Students thencompleted an application, which revealed their leadership skills and their history of community service. The applications were then rated by members of York's faculty who voted on which students they believed best fit the criteria for NHS. "This year we have ninety members, and last year we had one hundred and twenty members," explained advisor Ms. Kathy VanHoeck.

To kick off a brand-new year, NHS members met at Wilder Park during the summer for some before-school fun, getting together to enjoy a summer barbeque. They grilled hot dogs and hamburgers while some of the guys played bocce ball.

Throughout the year, members participated in a countless service projects. One project was "Adopt a Platoon," in which they worked together to collect supplies for the American soldiers fighting in Iraq. After collecting supples, they then assorted, wrapped, and sent them overseas. "I enjoyed this project the most," said senior Jessica Abuchaibe, "We made their lives a little better through the difficult time."

Another successful project was their fifth annual organization of "Adopt a Family," in which students bought and wrapped gifts for needy families throughout the area to be delivered before Christmas. "It is a wonderful feeling to give a happy holiday to a family in need," said Ms. Van Hoeck.

One of NHS's more popular fund-raising opportunities was flocking, which involved placing flamingos on people's lawns to celebrate birthdays or other significant events. Besides being a lot of fun, this project helped raise money for other events throughout the year.

Students in NHS contributed a lot to York without asking for anything more in return than the respect of their fellow classmates and citizens. "I truly enjoy working with the kids in NHS, because they are truly leaders," said Ms. Van Hoeck. The community knew where to turn when they needed help; they knew that NHS would get the job done. - Stephanie Graziano

EASY as π

DO you think you know everything? Do you follow sports? How about current events? Well the students on Scholastic Bowl don't think they do, they know it.

Scholastic Bowl was an organization that competed in contests in which students were asked questions regarding anything from academics to sports to current events. There were two separate teams on Scholastic Bowl: a varsity team and a junior varsity team. Five students competed for each team, making the team grow stronger as a group. "Having five people on each team helps give everyone a chance to participate," explained sponsor Mr. Jeremy Paschke.

This year, Scholastic Bowl met every Thursday to practice. Practices allowed participants to get used to the questions asked at competitions. Students were asked questions like 'What is the southern term for fried corn with the hulls removed and ground into meal?' and 'What style of decorative art was also a style of architecture during the 1920's and 1930's?' Once they answered one of the toss-up questions, which were worth ten points, they were asked a bonus question that was related to the toss-up. Bonus questions included four parts, each worth five points. "Scholastic Bowl demands strength in all academic courses," commented Mr. Paschke. "That's what makes it so difficult."

During meets, Scholastic Bowl competed against one other team. Students sat in teams and were asked questions. Like in practice, if they answered correctly, they were asked a bonus question. With each correctly answered question, participants received points, which were compared to those earned by the other team at the end of the meet to determine a winner. "These kids aren't just brainiacs—they are good people who just happen to have quick-processing brains," said sponsor Mr. Andrew Bendelow, "It's been my privilege to drive them to meets, suffer their losses and celebrate their victories with them, and practice with them. We have some strong freshmen and sophomores coming up, so I think this program is going to only get better for York."

Scholastic Bowl deals with all subjects, but Math Team deals primarily with math. "Its weird, but we're really not kidding when we say we like to do math problems," said senior Thomas Murphy. "This makes us different from any other club. I can guarantee that no other club likes math as much as us." Senior Joseph Lamplot went on to say, "We like to perform mathematical operations, especially those including quadratics and logarithms." Fortunately for those involved, Math team worked with a variety of math problems this year.

At meets, different grade levels were given separate subjects to work with. Each student then had half an hour to complete four questions related to that subject. According to junior Samir Chabra, "Math team is a club where you go to other schools and take a math test. Depending on how well you do, you get a certain number of points. The school with the most points wins." There were about thirty students on math team this past year, though not all members participated in every meet.

Math team met every Tuesday morning to practice the types of tests they would encounter during the meets. Sophomore Caitlin Collins said, "My favorite part of Math team would be the candy bar contest." The candy bar contest was when the entire team would work on twenty problems; the winning team won candy bars. "I am most proud of our achievement in winning the candy bar contest at the October meet," said sponsor Mr. Max Shoenberg. "Our team had not won the candy bar contest for five years, and we beat Stevenson, one of the best schools in the state, to do it. That candy tasted ever so sweet." YOU GOT SERVED!

EVERY student in the York Service Club knows the value and fulfillment of helping others. Throughout the course of the year, club members discovered the rewarding feeling that accompanies volunteer work. Service Club president and senior Megan Cruse said, "The most important reward that I get is the personal satisfaction that I get when I help others. Seeing someone in need being helped and making their life better; it gives such a warm feeling."

Service Club gave York students the opportunity to volunteer their time not only for the community, but also at school. The organization attracted over one hundred students this year. In order to accommodate all of the interested students, various committees were created within the club, each under the direction of a different chairperson. Committees planned a variety of different volunteering projects, which allowed club members an opportunity to serve their community. This system was new to the organization this year. Service Club advisor Ms. Judy Jackson said, "Because we're committed, we're able to provide at least twelve different serving opportunities each semester. We are able to accommodate more students with different talents." Some of the different committee projects included Bingo, Chore Days, Adopt-a-Family, Peer Tutoring, Special Olympics, Senior Citizen Prom, and Humanitarian. Service Club also ran food drives for people in need and sent letters to American troops in Iraq.

The early morning Service Club meetings were always very busy and productive. On some days, committee chairs would inform the rest of the club's members about upcoming activities. At other times, the members of the club would plan events within their committees and work on projects related to different Service Club events, such as making decorations for Chore Days or writing cards to soldiers.

Through Service Club, York students were able to learn the value and satisfaction that accompanies helping other people. After spending time volunteering, junior John Shepard claimed that he views things differently, "Its been a great way for me to help people in the community in ways that I never thought possible. It has made me more aware of people in need." - Sarah Small

Fear Factor

Eat your Heart Out!

PUBLIC speaking: the number-one fear shared by Americans. This is one fear that York's Speech team can cross off their list, after spiders and gooey things.

The Speech team traveled all over the Chicagoland area to compete against other high schools in over thirteen different dramatic events. There were acting and speaking performances, memorized speeches, original material, and improvisations, among others. The most common events were acting roles, speeches, and improvisations.

The York Speech team, headed by Mr. Mark Golebiowski, gave individuals an opportunity to research and debate relevant issues on current political, social, and pop-culture topics. Additional events were added towards the end of the season. According to Mr. Golebiowski, "Last year there was an event called 'Storytelling' where students read to five and six year olds, and the children actually ranked the best storyteller."

The members of Speech team met every Monday and attended individual practice sessions with Mr. Golebiowski and four other assistant coaches: Mr. John Forsythe, Ms. Dawn Forde, Ms. Sarah Ruzicka, and Ms. Sarah Wilson. During the individual practice sessions, students met with the Speech team advisors for 30 minutes to discuss and critique their performances. On Fridays, all Speech-team members reconvened to participate in "Speech-a-Palooza," where random Speech-team members performed one of the thirteen different dramatic events for a prize better than trophies: food!

At 6:30 a.m. every Saturday morning, the Speech team crew gathered at school to travel to their competitions and perform the events that they had been working on throughout the week. Captain, junior Allison Witham explained, "On Saturdays, we don't see the light of day." Saturday competitions usually lasted about twelve hours and Speech-team members stayed until judges announced individual and team scores.

This year's team grabbed the attention of audience members with their invigorating performances and comical personas. They had a two-minute-long cheer that included just about every tongue twister that can be imagined.

Speech team not only provided an after-school activity for students, but also influenced their personal lives. When asked about what participating on speech team has done for her, Witham said, "Speech team has made me develop speaking skills in both social situations and class discussions."

Captains included Seniors Margaret Sotos, who mastered the performance of original comedy, and Sarah Wilber who placed seventh at state in 2004 for her remarkably persuasive original oratory speech. Always consistent in their outstanding performance, Sotos and Wilber were considered by their teammates to be two of the most valuable Speech-team members at York.

According to its members, the Speech team's chemistry was extraordinary. Sotos explained, "Speech team is all about team unity and good karma, and our team is just awesome."

THE BEST OF ALL WORLDS

HOLA. Ciao. Guten Tag. Bonjour. there are so many ways to say hello. Diversity is great among the York students. It is everywhere one looks. "All the foreign language clubs bring different cultures to the student body," proclaimed second-year French Club member sophomore Catharine Varnas on why these clubs are important to York.

"International Club," as sophomore Caitlin Collins described, "opens your eyes to see and learn about other cultures and countries. I now am more versed in my knowledge of the world." International Club was best known for their delicious food, positive learning environment, and for selling those cool pumpkin grams at Halloween. They taught students at York about other countries and cultures, helping them to become more understanding and aware of the different students that walk along the halls.

Passion, love, and pasta are all words frequently associated with Italy. Students who wanted to learn more about these topics joined Italian Club, which exposed its members to what Italian culture really consists of. They taught students about how Italians live and the traditions they follow. "Italian Club contributes to York by teaching its members about Italian culture, allowing us to have a greater understanding of the world," said second-year member sophomore Marie Hansen. Students who wanted to become more involved in learning about Italy participated in the summer program, spening two weeks in Italy.

They are seen in the halls, selling daffodils, Eiffel Tower gummies, and Toblerones. They contributed to York by giving the students the opportunity to learn about French heritage and to enjoy the food and cultures of France. They were the members of French Club. "French Club rocks!" exclaimed sophomore Luke Kahovec, a newcomer to the organization. The positive environment and enthusiasm in French Club quickly rubbed off on its members. The club was best known for its annual Mardi Gras celebration. "It's a fun club filled with many fun activities and a little bit of hidden learning," stated sophomore Catharine Varnas.

Junior Allison Witham believed that her third year in German Club "has helped me develop my knowledge of German culture and language." German Club made more of a significant impact on York more than most students realized. They not only made important contributions to the foreign language faculty, but they also shared their knowledge with students. "We help to spread unknown culture throughout York's student body," explained sophomore Caitlin Sheridan, "We host Weichnachfest (Christmas fest), which is open to the entire student body. It shares our knowledge of Germany and its customs." As Ms. Heide Bentley put it, "German is a beautiful language and has an interesting culture."

Spanish Club was a popular choice for many of the students here at York. As sophomore Luke Kahovec put it, "We embrace the Spanish culture, as it helps us to broaden our horizons." Around the time of Halloween, the Spanish Club hosted a party in honor of 'La dia de los Muertas,' which means 'Day of the dead.' There was lots of food, games and fun to go around.

ROCK WE 2 BACH

IMAGINE over 130 musical instruments being played in unison; note after note as clear as crystal. One may think it is a symphony at Carnegie Hall, when in actuality; it is York's finest band. There were three levels currently in the band, starting with Cadet. The Cadet band was composed of about 60 freshmen who learned the basics and techniques of playing an instrument. Once a student successfully completed Cadet, they moved on to the next level of Concert. Concert band used what they learned in Cadet to further improve on their knowledge of the realm of music. The highest level of the band was Symphonic, where students put emphasis on working towards perfection of little things, such as technique. Junior Kelly Fitzgerald was in Symphonic band, and she felt that "You almost get to the point that you're bilingual with your instrument – you don't think, you just play."

Along with the three levels of education, students were also involved in Pep Band and Marching Band. These two branches of the department were composed of Concert and Symphonic students. The other option for an extracurricular was Jazz Ensemble. Pep and Marching Band were often the highlight of basketball and football games, making halftimes exciting. Many students loved band throughout the year with all of the various songs they played. Among some of these students were the Band Staff, a group of seven selected students picked to help with long- and short-term goals for daily practices and concerts. This group was made up of junior Nathan Parker, and seniors Allison Ahlgrim, Elizabeth Bourgart, Justin Czarnowski, Curt Miller, Lauren Paulus, and Jennifer Sammarco.

Along with concerts, the band also had chairs, where people were placed for seating for each instrument's section, and auditions were held about four times a year. These auditions were not about picking order, but rather different sections have different parts, and the emphasis was more on who was playing what part, and how well.

Band director Mr. Ron Polancich truly loved his band this year. After teaching at York for over 19 years, he saw definite potential in the kids every day. "People in Elmhurst who don't have kids at York come just to see the band, and I feel that speaks volumes." - Kara Nottelmann

One BIG Happy Family

FAMILY, large and loud! This year's York Choir was a family, full of variety in both songs and members. They sang songs ranging from a nontraditional birthday song to Brittany Spears hits.

Scales, sheet music, voices, male and female, all meshed together to create the Choir. Many began with little prior singing experience, yet this group of people made their voices heard. The participants started with learning notes and progressed to sight-reading which required students to sing a song without knowing how it sounded before hand, basing their beat and melody entirely on sheet music. They more than rose to the challenge.

Choir is an academic class which met once every day. As the year progressed, the group became more unified and focused on its goals. According to advisor Ms. Becky Mariannetti, "The level of music and the positive attitude steps up every day."

Starting off the year in small chamber groups, which varied in size from two to eight people, the Choir began each day by singing scales to warm up their voices. Choir members were then expected to sing for the remaining duration of the class period.

The group's first concert involved a mix of York's Choir, Orchestra, and Band and was followed by the annual Holiday Concert, which included members from all levels of Choir: Cadet, Choraliers, and Concert. Throughout the rest of the year, those who were interested were able to try out for different solos.

At the end of the year, people walked away from Choir not only with knowledge of how to sing scales and music, but also with lifelong friends. Senior Megan Honan said, "This is my fourth year in choir and I truly value everything that I have done. I have made so many awesome friendships and have grown so much as a musician."

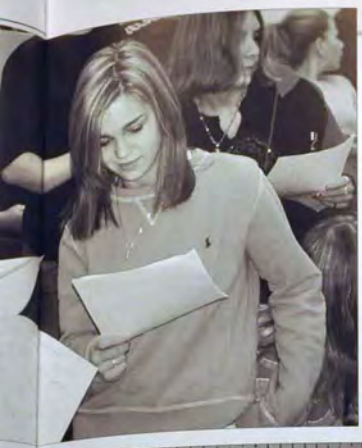

Choir also served as an excellent opportunity for students to relax and escape the stresses of their school day. "Choir is the best period of the day," explained senior Amanda Block, "You get to escape the stress of school and do what you love – sing." This dedication of appreciation of Choir was shared by all those who participated. - Sammy Choyke

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING EVEN BETTER HOME & GARDENS

WHILE some students stand out in math or English, others have a knack for the family and consumer sciences. These students were provided a chance to learn and refine their talents by joining FCCLA, a national youth organization that stands for Family, Careers, Community Leaders of America. There are about eighty participating members at York. The organization allowed students take part in such programs as Interior Design, Food Services, Child Development, and Clothing Construction.

In order to participate in FCCLA, members had to be currently enrolled in at least one Family and Consumer Science course at York. The organization rarely met as a whole, but usually met as "chapters" during their specific class periods.

The students in FCCLA made efforts to better the community with a series of fundraisers and charity events. For instance, on one occassion, FCCLA students donated food and personal items to the American soldiers fighting in Iraq. To help support them, the organization contributed bags upon bags of such materials as canned goods, toothpaste, shaving cream, baby wipes, batteries, and Kleenex to a number of military platoons stationed in Fallujah. These daily luxuries, which many students take for granted, served as generous gifts for the men and women fighting overseas.

FCCLA also participated in regional, state, and national competitions. York students performed particularly well in the area of interior design, in which they took home five "most-outstanding" awards at the 2004 state competition. Preparing for the this year's contest, freshman Stephanie Barber said, "Ms. Lasko introduced me to FCCLA in my 'Clothing for You' class. I made a sparkly blue shirt with bright green flowers to take to competition. I'm getting really excited!"

A very popular occasion associated with FCCLA was the annual Prom Fashion Show. Serving as a fun precursor to prom, the event allowed girls a chance to show off their new dresses, while guys were specially asked by the organizers in th Fashion Merchandise class to model new tuxedo designs.

By providing members with a chance to reach out to the community and perfect their family and consumer science skills, FCCLA taught students essential life lessons that will benefit them throughout their high school experience and beyond. - Jorie Ganser

Mirror Mirror on the wall . . .

These Kids Express It ALL

MASSIVE messes! Papers galore! This year, students submitted samples of poetry, prose, short fiction, drawings, and photography to produce a magazine called Mirrors, which celebrated the artistic expression of York students. Publishing two large issues throughout the year, the Mirrors staff relied heavily on organization. "I have issues about being a neat freak," joked editor senior Mingee Kim. Thanks to staff members like Mingee, the confusion on Mirrors was minimal.

In order to ensure complete coverage of artistic expression at York, the Mirrors staff was made up of a diverse group of musicians, artists, writers, and thespians.

Staff members got along wonderfully, as they often spent their down time enjoying a game or two of catch phrase. "The staff has a high female to male ratio (11:3)," said editor senior Kevin O'Malley, "It's really delicious."

The process of putting together each magazine was time consuming. Mirrors editors seniors Margaret Sotos, Kevin O'Malley, and Mingee Kim began the process by meeting nearly ten times over summer vacation. Together, they planned out the year and evaluated what steps needed to be taken in order to create the best publication possible. "They all came together for the student forum," explained Ms. Judy Jackson. However, that was just the beginning.

During the year, the Mirrors staff received submissions from all kinds of students. Upon receiving submissions, the staff evaluated each piece anonymously by grading them in three groups. Groups varied nearly every week, to ensure the influence of new perspectives and ideas. Each group was then given each week about ten to twelve pieces, for which they wrote evaluations and then later discussed. In the end, a consensus was made to determine which pieces would be included in the magazine.

After looking at all of the final pieces, the Mirrors staff put their heads together to come up with an appropriate theme, which would set the mood for the entire magazine. Taking nearly three weeks to come up with, the theme determined how sections would be named, as well as the order in which the each piece would appear within the book. After adding perfecting touches, the magazine was sent to the press. - Sammy Choyke

for their future PROFESSIONS

ALL children dream of what they will become when they grow up. For some, it's kings and princesses and for other's it's doctors and teachers. This year, a select number of York students received an opportunity to live their dream job without having to grow up yet.

Invitation to Teach is one of York's college prep programs. For four days out of a week, students traveled to middle and junior high schools in the Elmhurst area to help teachers with everyday tasks. They worked as aides and did such things as creating lesson plans and testing out new learning theories. The students had a chance to interact with the children each day and watch them learn. "The students are there day in and day out, from beginning to end so they get to see the kids change and learn," said Ms. Barbara Lasko, head advisor. "It's an excellent program for college prep."

For all the want-to-be doctors and nurses out there, there is Medical Careers. This two semester course first required the students to learn anatomy and physiology for one semester, then had them apply what they learned by actually going to Elmhurst Memorial Hospital and/or the Center for Health to interact with patients. For two periods a day five days a week, students shadowed doctors and nurses to observe their techniques, helped patients in rehabilitation with basic tasks like feeding and changing clothes, and sometimes students even got to witness live births or open heart surgeries. "Medical Careers is such an invaluable experience," says Ms. Catie Feigh, head advisor. "You really learn so much from helping these patients and it is an enormous prep for college." - Maureen Ohler

BABY GOT BACH!

OVER sixty people are sitting with wooden instruments, small or gigantic in size, carefully moving their bows across finely tuned strings. You can hear evidence of dedication and commitment through each beautiful note of the music. This is the York Orchestra practice room.

Orchestra gathered together nearly every day of the school year for practice and learning. Because of the large number of students participating in its curriculum, Orchestra was divided into three different levels. The three levels (Cadet, Concert, and Symphony) practiced rigorously each day in order to perfect their assigned music pieces. Mr. Roy Ostwald expressed his passion for Orchestra when he said, "I enjoy passing on the musical knowledge and experience that I remember enjoying as a student myself."

Orchestra's Cadet level catered primarily to incoming freshmen. Although they were freshmen, their level of playing was exceptional. The more advanced Concert Orchestra included experienced students from nearly every grade level. Orchestra's Symphony level was made up mainly junior and senior students, and it was geared towards the program's most developed musicians.

Orchestra performed many concerts but never competed in formal competition, contrary to common belief. However, most individual students competed with themselves as they strived to be the best musicians they could be. York's Orchestra performed four major concerts throughout the year. Students from all levels were also given the opportunity to travel to Illinois State University and work with college conductors. The only time that students seemed to "compete" with other musicians was when Orchestra members auditioned for recognition from the Illinois Music Educators Association (IMEA). Yet even this was not so much a competition as it was the students' striving to learn from others and to improve upon their playing. Fourteen string players were accepted from York into the IMEA District Orchestra, with a chance to audition for All-State Honors. Mr. Ostwald was very proud of the recognition York received, saying "We are, without question, one of the best orchestra programs in Illinois."

This year, custom arrangements of concert seating were used to allow the Orchestra to create the most perfect sound possible. This seating sometimes changed to produce a different sound and to give different players more experience. Arranged together in separated sections, each instrumental group had to have a leadership system. A group's chief leader would get first chair, the secondary leader would get second chair, and so on. Although tryouts for chair positions were often stressful and nerve-racking, some people did not worry about them. When asked about his feelings regarding chair positions, sophomore Adam Nelson said, "I like swivel chairs!" The leadership system gave the entire Orchestra a stronger foundation.

York's Orchestra was renowned for its incredible sounds and extreme dedication. But, the one thing that made the Orchestra truly amazing was the fact that people who were not affiliated with the program in any way came to enjoy the sweet sound of the Orchestra concerts. This is what put the "extra" in our extraordinary Orchestra. - Luke Kahovec

Getting Involved

WITH THE SCHOOL, STUDENTS, AND STATE

THIS year, student council proved that hard work and dedication always pays off. Constantly finding new ways to benefit the York community, the fifty members of student council were led by advisors Ms. Sheila Fleming and Mr. Matt Moran. Students proved their commitment by meeting together four days a week during their fifth-period lunch and after school, as they planned and organized some of the year's most memorable activities and experiences for York students.

Student council members were always on hand to help out the school's administration, faculty, and student body. Some of the events that student council orchestrated this year included all of York's dances, fund-raisers, food drives, and blood drives. Looking to create a more fun school environment, they were even responsible for playing music in the halls. Student council members helped set the tone for much of York's school spirit, as they planned themes and activities for spirit week and homecoming. Enthused to be behind the scenes of such excitement, junior class president Jenna Silver said, "Homecoming week is hands down my favorite event that we organize on student council because the school spirit goes through the roof."

Though every staff member plays a significant role in student council, three York students went above and beyond their student council duties during the year. Junior Max McClintock and senior Christine DiPompeo served as president and treasurer, respectively, for the Northeast District Board of Student Councils, while senior Amira ElShareif was first-vice president of the state board. Their contributions and effort were greatly appreciated by their fellow staff members, as they helped to establish York as having one of the premier student councils in the area.

FOCUS on the FUTURE

ACHIEVEMENT. A good way to reach your goals is to be prepared for the future. The members of VICA and DECA were focused on preparing for life after high school and at the same time, enjoying themselves. Through their involvement, the club members were able to learn new skills and develop old ones in order to ensure they fulfill their personal goals, thus making their futures successful.

VICA was an organization which focused on industrial arts skills. Any student enrolled in an industrial technology class was eligible to be involved in VICA. The members did not meet during a specific class period, but they worked to improve their skills in wood working, computer graphics, and auto tech classes. All of this hard work was in preparation for the VICA competition.

Before the VICA members were eligible to compete at the state level, they needed to complete a written test which assessed each student's knowledge of the category in which he or she was entered. After passing the written test, the York VICA members were able to compete.

At the competitions, the VICA members of York competed in four different categories which included wood working, auto tech, computer graphics, and computer animated drafting. Each category had a different task set for the students competing. For example, in wood working the students were given supplies and a set of drawings and required to build a piece of furniture and in auto tech the students were to repair a car. The different tasks had to be completed in a limited amount of time and the participants were judged on how well they completed their given assignment.

In addition to the competitions, the VICA students were involved in school activities. They worked concessions at the basketball games to earn money and they participated in the Adopt-a-Family project during the month of December. Through their participation in VICA, the students learned not only industrial tech skills, but also the importance of work ethic and devotion. Senior James Mellone said, "Through VICA I gained a better understanding of workmanship, pride, camaraderie, and experience that will help me later in life."

DECA was another club whose members were sharpening their skills to achieve their business related goals.

Every morning during first period, the DECA students met in Mr. Borel's marketing class. During the class period, they worked on mastering the essentials of sales and marketing and gaining a better understanding of the business world. The club's main focus was preparing themselves for the DECA competitions which began in January and continued into the spring.

At the competitions DECA members were kept very busy. The students participated in role playing events in front of a panel of judges. During this event they were given a problem scenario and had a limited amount of time to prepare a solution before they were judged. The students were also asked to complete written tests which assessed their business knowledge. Some areas the tests covered were product knowledge, math, and basic economic skills.

The club members developed many lifelong skills through their involvement in DECA. They learned about the importance of good public relations skills and how businesses run. They also learned to think on their feet, appear poised in front of judges, and to react positively under pressure. Junior Leslie Heminsley perfectly summed up DECA by saying, "DECA is fun, exciting, and very educational. It's something that I will remember forever."

The VICA and DECA students were able to strengthen their talents in the fields of industrial tech and business. In addition to that, they were able to have fun and become involved in school activities. The club members were able to achieve their goals. - Sarah Small

THIS PUBLICATION IS HOT OFF THE PRESS!

EXTRA! Extra! For the York-hi staff, turning out a full newspaper every three weeks seemed overwhelming in and of itself, but the task became even more daunting this year when the size of the paper was increased to sixteen pages. On top of turning in quality articles every deadline, the staff had to work to insert captivating graphics and color into every issue. Staff advisor Mr. Andrew Bouque said, "The staff is trying to print fifteen issues this year, which increases the amount of copy to be produced by about 33%." Even though this task seemed impossible, the York-hi staff was up to the challenge. "The staff is diverse and there are a lot of talented students who ultimately contribute to make a good paper," said Bouque.

This year there were more staff members than ever on York-hi, and it took organization and determination to keep the staff and paper production running smoothly. "The stress level is very high; it's tense," said co-editor Danielle Hlavacek, "but the work ethic of the staff is excellent." This much was evident, the York-hi stuck to their deadlines and produced more papers this year than any other year before. Senior staffer Thomas Murphy explained, "We like to plan ahead and stay the course." It was a hard task, but the newspaper did not disappoint its audience.

Perhaps the reason the York-hi was so incredibly successful this year was the staff's development of concrete goals for the paper. "Basically, our ultimate goal is to keep students informed," said senior Todd Saunders. Editor-in-chief senior Timothy Boyle agreed, saying, "We try and produce the most professionally constructed paper possible and increase the entertainment factor at the same time. I think people are more interested in the paper this year than ever before." Boyle's thoughts proved to be a reality, as junior Kelly Hourihan said, "I like how the paper comes out more this year, I keep all the issues." Clearly, each staff member has the drive needed to produce a truly high quality newspaper at every deadline. Pick up a copy and read all about it! - Kathryn Vilim

Making Lasting Memories...

You'll want to remember

PICA, spread, cropping, stroke, layout, cut line, body copy. If you think science has a lot of vocabulary to learn, speak to a yearbook staff member and they'll change your opinion. What do all of these terms mean? That is the number one question among first-year staff members. Fortunately, the staff picks it up much faster than one would think. First-year member junior John Shepard said, "There is a lot of technology I was not familiar with, which made me feel confused at first and a little worried, but I caught on a lot quicker than I had originally thought." However, learning new terms is only a small factor in the large process of making the best yearbook possible.

To say it was tense when deadline approached would be an understatement. There were four major deadlines, each with specific one- or two-page spreads that went into the yearbook. Each staff member was responsible for producing one or two spreads each deadline. To create a quality spread, members spoke with the supervisor of a specific activity or club, conducted interviews with five or six of its members, and then wrote text according to the information they gathered. In order to provide a visual representation of that activity or club, pictures were taken of its members in action. Finally, the text and pictures were put into a program and they were arranged as a layout for the spread. When everything was perfect, the layout was sent to the publication plant to be printed.

When it seemed as if it would be difficult to make a deadline, the yearbook advisor, Ms. Isadora Parrini and its editors, seniors Erica Hochleutner, Suzanne Ekblad, and Claude LeRose, really pulled through. They did this not by luck or magic, but by hard work. Their efforts not only included working after school on occasion until after 10:00 pm, but it involved giving up much of their time on weekends as well. For instance, just before the first deadline of the year arrived, Ms. Parrini, LeRose, Ekblad, Hochleutner, and senior Ian Fletcher encountered a desperate situation as they realized that some spreads were incomplete. As a result, they had to stay at school until 11:30 pm on their Friday night to make sure everything was finalized and ready for the mandatory Saturday morning deadline. Hochleutner described the scene: "There was utter chaos in the room, pictures were everywhere and everything was torn apart; but in the end, we made our deadline." These people demonstrated extreme responsibility and care and their efforts were greatly appriecated by their staff.

Yearbook required very hard work, but it was also a lot of fun. During less stressful times in between deadlines, the staff often had parties during holiday seasons and celebrated each member's birthday with cake and singing. Always making sure to find time for hanging out, the staff laughed at senior Megan Cruse's crazy jokes, junior John Shepard's outrageous costumes from Salvation Army, junior Lindsey Dyer's latest gossip, and junior Maureen Ohler's games of Pictionary.

Through all the frustration and worry of lost spreads and approaching deadlines, the yearbook staff realized that stress was all part of the awesome experience they enjoyed together that year. They see themselves as a unique staff, united with the same goal of creating a great book that keeps them coming back year after year to do it all over again. - Michelle McSweeney

When the freshmen came into high school for the first time this year, they were nervous and excited to begin one of the most important times of their lives. They all had worries about not being able to find their classes, open their lockers, or have friends to sit with at lunch, but at the same time they were all eager to discover high school. After the first few months of school, freshmen learned the ropes of high school life and were finally able to take the time to enjoy high school. With all of York's extracurricular activities at their fingertips, they made new friends and expanded their range of interests. This also allowed them to gain a greater understanding of themselves, as they discovered hidden talents, changing interests and new goals for the future. Freshmen year was full of countless firsts: a first formal dance; a first set of finals; a first taste of freedom. The year served as a chance for students to establish relationships and interests that will last them for the next three years and beyond.

Learning under FIRE

"Ring ring. It's 5:30 a.m. and my cell phone is ringing to inform me that I have fifteen minutes to get out of the house. When I arrive, my nose is assaulted by the scent of charred wood. Police, firemen, and families are surrounding the yellow crime scene tape. This is just a slight insight into what I spent the first four months of my senior year doing," explained senior Jillian Anthony

Anthony was one of 12 other students chosen to live in Springfield, Illinois for the Illinois Governmental Internship Program which worked for the office of the Illinois State Fire Marshall in the division of Arson Investigation.

While there, she was given the opportunity to accompany investigators at fire scenes and assist them in their investigation. She helped carry materials such as cameras or shovels, or held flashlights and made measurements right in the "heat" of the scene. If she was not at the scene, she was busy working in the office of the Illinois State Fire Marshall filing, helping prepare for their yearly conference, or updating the Arson website; or she sat in on interviews regarding fires and did follow-ups on them. Furthermore, when not working, the twelve interns spent the year just like any other student: going out to eat, renting movies, or just hanging out together.

Anthony strongly encourages others to participate in such rewarding opportunities just like hers. "If given the chance I would do this program again in a heartbeat. I would also advise others interested to do this program also. This is not only for students interested in investigation, but there are also many other internships that can be done. If you are interested in becoming an intern, the College and Career Center has more information, or you can go online and easily find them as well."

Finally, as Anthony stated, "Doing this program really solidified my decision to become a Crime Scene Investigator and therefore work for the FBI investigating federal crimes, like that of one you would see on many of the hit CSI television shows. Through this experience, I learned that I could handle the gruesome details, and the pressure of this type of job." - Suzanne Ekblad

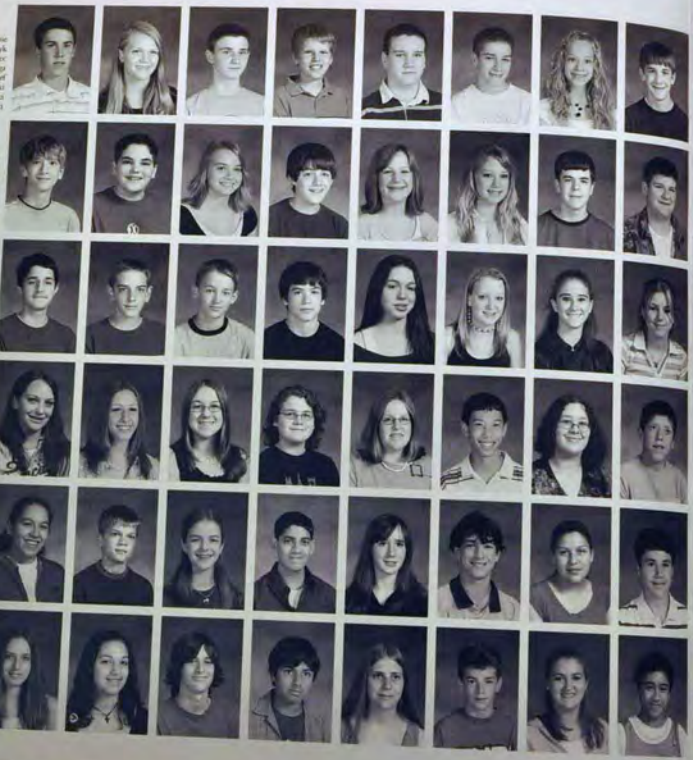

FIGHT for your RIGHTS

This year, Amnesty International helped to spread awareness about human rights throughout the world. The noncompetitive organization, supervised by Ms. Joan Davis held meetings on a regular basis, during which they planned ways to reach out to York students and the community. Such efforts included after school events in York forum rooms, where they would provide students with the chance to listen to speakers or watch videos dealing with awareness of human rights. One of Amnesty's most popular events included the annual "Rock for Human Rights" concert, which featured bands of York students. The event helped to raise money for such charity organizations as "Mutual Ground"- a women's center in Naperville that deals with helping women who are the victims of abuse. This year, Amnesty International provided students with an excellent opportunity to gain an awareness of the world around them. - Luke Kahovic

EMPOWER to the PEOPLE

Every Thursday morning at 7:00 A.M. a small but devoted group of young women made their way to Ms. Virginia Highstone's room. These girls made up York's very own women's rights group, called Empower.

The club was open to anyone who wanted to discuss issues of suffrage and women's rights. At each meeting, the club talked about prominent women in society and on the news, in addition to how current events affect women's rights worldwide. Empower also held several after school meetings during which they showed classic films, such as Girl with a Pearl Earring, that dealt with issues regarding the role of women in society. Members also took an active role in promoting the welfare of women during the "Stop Genocide in Sudan Week." Empower served as an excellent way for students to celebrate the rights of women in society. - Brad Olalde sophomores

Sophomore year is full of promise. This year, sophomores had the opportunity to take life by the horns and discover a niche for themselves both in and out of school. Now fully adjusted to high school life, sophomores began to focus their excitement on the magic that is finally receiving a driver's license. The ability to drive fueled many opportunities for sophomores, as it gave them the freedom to get more involved with friends and school activities. Sophomores took advantage of this freedom, as they chose to participate in a variety of extracurricular activities and social functions. When they weren't involving themselves with school activities, sophomores were cracking the books, as they began to feel the pressure of looking at colleges and planning for the future ahead. However, they didn't let these pressures bother them too much After all, sophomore year is supposed to be a chance for students to regroup and have fun after facing the anxieties of freshman year.

Excuses to be LATE...

"I was late to class because a horde of angry goblins stole my homework and I had to get through the labyrinth before David Bowie showed up in his tight pants." - Sophomore Jose Nateras

"When I was running down the hallway, my legs detached and started running in the opposite direction. I had to go catch them. Do you know how hard it is to run with your arms?" - Sophomore Kelly Jackson

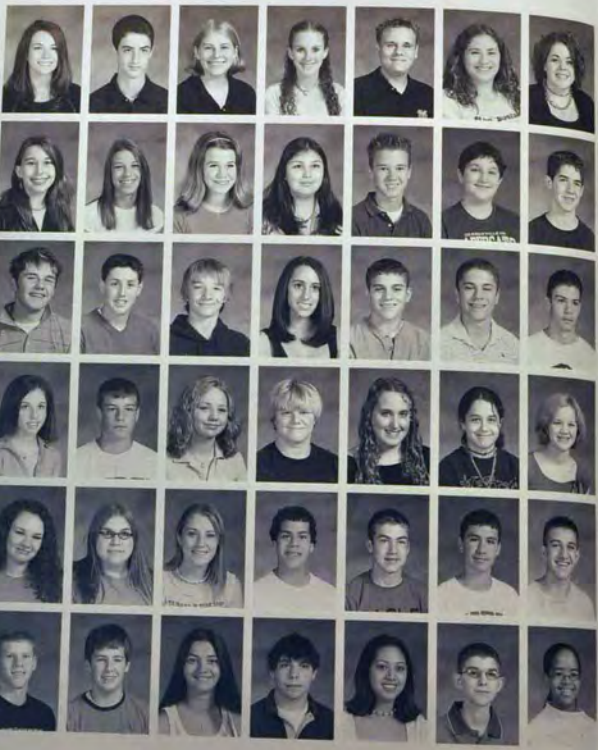

"I was half-way to school when my homework grew legs and walked away. I chased it, caught it, and then I slipped on a puddle and fell into a black hole." - Sophomore Samantha Shwa

"A herd of angry llama farmers chased me down the street and then a UFO came down and abducted me and then just dropped me off now. ...What time is it?" - Sophomore Meghan Dolan actually, a lot less than that.

Jetsetting has a new face in senior Nathaniel White. This international aficionado has been traveling the world since his first trip to Argentina at the age of three and has not stopped since. Globetrotting on five of the world's seven continents, White's vacations enable him to visit countries like China, Japan, Germany, France, Australia, Peru and Argentina. While sightseeing these distant nations, he loves to experience new adventures. He explained, "One of the most fun places I've been was the German Autobahn, because we rented a car and went over 150 m.p.h. Legally!" This exuberance allows White to feel natural hopping from country to country for hours on end. His longest consecutive air travel was from Singapore to Hong Kong to New Delhi, India to London, UK to New York to Chicago: more than 32 hours on a plane. Obviously comfortable skyrocketing across the globe, White wants to become a commercial pilot in the future. In the present, he can be seen strolling the halls of York sporting his favorite souvenir: a collection of 40 t-shirts from international Hard Rock Cafés. Although he frequents these iconic restaurant chains, White admits his favorite meal is "at a little café in Paris that serves the biggest crepes I've ever seen for less than two euros."

As far as places he has not had stamped in his overflowing passport, White wants to visit Africa to see the Egyptian pyramids, ride on a camel, or go on a safari. After that visit, he only has to go skiing through Antarctica to have stepped on all seven continents. - Ian Fletcher

RAISE your voice

Not many people can say they traveled the world singing, but sophomore Clare Marshall can. After following her older sister's example, in third grade, Marshall joined Glen Ellyn's Children's Choir and has been singing and touring ever since. Traveling out of the country, Marshall has sung in Australia, New Zealand and Brazil, where she met actress Julia Roberts while singing for a documentary. Closer to home, Marshall sang with some big name individuals, as well as some prestigious groups. In eighth grade Marshall sang with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, went to New York to sing at Carnegie Hall and sang at the Joffery Ballet's Nutcracker. To add to her list, this past December, she had the privilege of singing with the pop group Bare Naked Ladies.

Marshall didn't just get good over night. She practiced two times a week for two hours, as she would warm up and work on sight reading. During practice, she trained her self to sing classical, a capella, jazz, pop, holiday, and opera songs, although she has taken a particular liking to a capella. Being able to sing so many different types of music and traveling to so many different places has really made an impact on her. Marshall explained, "Being able to have so many opportunities made lots of long lasting friendships. Being able to share my music passion is what has really kept me motivated." - Amanda Roszel

Tests, projects, ACTs, SATs, and college searches. Sounds fun, right? Well, the junior class thoroughly enjoyed all of those things this year. Juniors prepared themselves for the future, as they sought out their ideal colleges and thought about potential careers. The year included frequent visits to the College and Career Center and the ever-so-bothersome question, "What am I going to do for the rest of my life?" When they weren't participating in ACT and SAT preparatory classes or getting involved in extracurricular activities to boost their resumes, juniors were trying everything in their power to balance their rigorous courseloads. Now regared as upperclassmen, juniors began taking on more responsibility in school and community affairs. There is no doubt that junior year is one of the most difficult years of high school, but this year's juniors came together and battled through it, making great friends along the way.

Do you know WHO this is?

JUGGLING at its FINEST

Instead of going home on a Friday afternoon, wondering what to do for the next few hours, when the sounds of the bell came over the intercom, junior Allison Witham decided to go juggle with her friends and Mr. Jeremy Paschke. She first became interested in Juggling Club at York her freshman year when she saw a poster in the hall and decided that it would be an interesting hobby to take up. Since then, she has progressed tremendously to be the club's president and has learned many new tricks with Mr. Paschke's help.

A typical afternoon of having fun on Fridays started out with 10-15 minutes of people juggling on their own with tips from either Witham or Mr. Paschke, and then naturally flowed into a time period of progression tips; these were people that were trying to learn new skills, and they got the help they needed at the club. After that, the last twenty minutes were used for passing, mainly between Witham and Mr. Paschke, where she learned most of her new material.

The talent show was a great opportunity for Witham to showcase her juggling skills. "It was exciting to perform and be backstage with all of the other acts because we didn't take it too seriously. We juggled gummy animals and had fun with it," Witham explained. She also believes that being a girl juggler isn't that uncommon. She is goofy and outgoing, so it fits her personality, and it was a flexible club to be in with Speech Team and a sport included. Besides juggling balls, she also learned how to juggle clubs, rings, pins, beanbags, knives, and even flaming torches. "I like to sit in the cafeteria during lunch and juggle my grapes, and then eat them," she joked.

Since Witham first joined Juggling Club two years ago, she has progressed into a wonderful juggler. As for the rest of junior year, she said, "It will eventually end! Just kidding - I think it's challenging and my classes are interesting, but it is hard work." For now, she will stick to her usual schedule to end a stressful week with exchanges and throws. - Kara Nottelmann

According To...

Junior Michael Degraff:

The perfect girl would...

1) Slam dunk.
2) Be able to dance.
3) Be able to throw a 90+ fastball.
4) Be able to tee it up properly.
5) Eat pudding.

The perfect girl would not...

1) Listen to something besides Vanessa Carlton.
2) Wear Chuck Taylors (I hate those).
3) Speak French.
4) Not want to watch the Blade trilogy.
5) Read this list.

"Don't call him by the wrong name." - Senior Kevin O'Malley

Elizabeth Bondy:

The perfect guy would...

1) Open doors.
2) Be outgoing.
3) Be sweet (compliment her).
4) Walk you to the door.
5) Be funny (crack a joke, she'll love you for it).

The perfect guy would not...

1) Be shy.
2) Be rude.
3) Allow awkward silences.
4) Refer to his ex-girlfriends or your ex-boyfriends.
5) "Forget" his wallet.

"A guy should never talk about himself all the time." - Senior Mingee Kim Vroom, Vroom ...

"On our way to the state cross country meet, we were supposed to be going south on I-80. Instead, we were going north and ended up in Chicago. We realized that the auto pilot had been directing us to the Sears Tower." - Junior Daniel Pizzi

"We were going 30 m.p.h. over the speed limit and I slammed into my teammate's car ahead of me as we were trying to TP for the boys' cross country team." - Junior Michael Marchese

"I backed into a power line. I also backed into a light pole at the 7-Eleven." - Junior Peter Robles

seniors

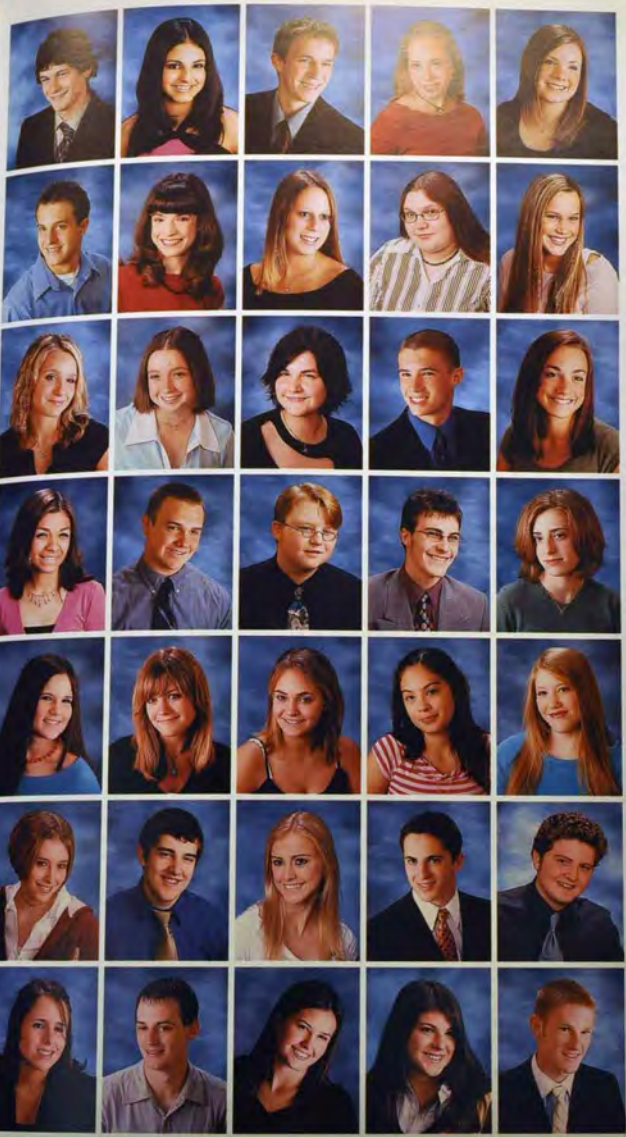

Senior year is a meaningful time for all students. Whether it is the anticipation of college or the joyful relief that follows four years of hard work, the year serves as a wonderful prelude to the final days together with friends, classmates, and teachers. In these last few days, seniors begin to think about how high school benefitted them. They will take with them the memories of York and their stories will be embedded within the walls of the building that they have become so familiar with. On that final day of graduation, no one will think of the day that they forgot their quarter project at home or the time they smudged someone else's Puma. Instead, they will cherish the time spent with each other and they will be proud for becoming one class. Friends, acquaintances, and peers will stay with them for years to come. The moment has come to look forward to a new beginning. This class has hiked uphill long enough, and now it's time to wave from such great heights.

Senior Class Of 2005

We Remember Them

At the rising of the sun and at its going down
We remember them.

At the blowing of the wind and in the chill of winter
We remember them.

At the opening of the buds and in the rebirth of spring
We remember them.

At the blueness of the skies and in the warmth of summer
We remember them.

At the rustling of the leaves and in the beauty of autumn
We remember them.

At the beginning of the year and when it ends
We remember them.

As long as we live, they too will live, for they are now a part of us as
We remember them.

When we are weary and in need of strength
We remember them.

When we are lost and sick at heart
We remember them.

When we have joy we crave to share
We remember them.

When we have decisions that are difficult to make
We remember them.

When we have achievements that are based on theirs
We remember them.

So long as we live, they too shall live, for they are now a part of us as
We remember them.

From Roland B. Gittelsohn

We dedicate this book in loving memory of those we have lost this year.

Faculty

Education does not exist without those willing to administer it. Over a four year career at York, one learns that teachers and staff venture beyond the books. Though it is not professionally required, many faculty members take time out of their personal lives to establish relationships with students on an extra-curricular basis. The faculty perfom tasks that create the basis of the school; from secretaries who can find order in a chaotic office to custodians who give a new meaning to "immaculate." We find that York is built on more than a new building of bricks and tile, for the true structure is found in the efforts of staff and administrators providing students with a healthy learning environment where identities form and friendships generate. The variety of "new blood" and "experienced wisdom" offers students a network of information that can't be found in any textbook. Educators are not only mentors, but craftsmen who help students develop a character that they can use in the world beyond schooling.

Did you KNOW...

Mr. Max Schoenberg has an incredible math mind. He can solve the cube of any number between 1 and 100.

Mr. Rob Wagner played professional football for the Dallas Cowboys.

When Mr. Charles Ovando isn't teaching, he is "hacking" it up with his considerable hacky sack skills.

Mr. Steve Cochran has a black belt in three types of Karate, Jujitsu Ryu, Kyu Kushink, and American Kempo.

Mr. Jeremy Paschke formed the York Juggling Club three years ago. It has since grown under his phenomenal juggling skills.

Too Hot To Handle

A Chinese yo-yo flying loose whizzes past. Today is a Friday and Juggling Club has begun in the Commons. Many people have the common misconception that Juggling Club only includes juggling; it doesn't. Among other things, members practiced pins, devils sticks, balancing, and the Chinese yo-yo. Newcomer, sophomore James Mierendorf realized this once he joined the club.

When Mierendorf started to learn to juggle he could only start with two balls at a time. After practicing for 2-3 weeks he was relatively okay; then he progressed to 3 balls. After the 3 ball tricks, he will eventually graduate to rings, pins, and passing. There are other ways to learn to juggle another newcomer, junior Justin Borowski learned by himself while sitting on the bench during a baseball game. He said that he just picked up some balls and tried to juggle and that was it. Since that day he has quickly progressed to pins. In his opinion the hardest thing to do is going from juggling balls to juggling pins because it's like learning to juggle all over again. Junior Allison Witham, the club's president, disagrees she said that the hardest thing for beginners is the switch from juggling 2 balls at a time to 3 balls at a time.

As a participant in juggling club, equipment is provided, so pins, rings and flaming chainsaws are all included in a membership. The skills learned can be used for a lifetime, and entertain even the youngest of audiences. Whether its working for the circus, performing a magic show, or panhandling on the sidewalk, juggling can even provide a living far into the future. - Madeline Brodt

Au revoir Auf Wiedersehen

Thank you...

Miss P - For being the greatest woman on earth. We can't thank you enough for spending all of those long nights and weekends with us in the yearbook room. Without your guidence and patience, this book would have never made it to print. Thank you so much!
Rachel - For being so sweet to everyone on staff and for trying to bench-press Erica.
Jenny - For being such a cool girl. By the way, Claude still hasn't seen Cool Runnings.
Madeline - For taking some awesome photos. We owe many of our great photos to you.
Sammy - For running all those errands for us and constantly torturing Claude with pokes.
Baillie - For turning all of your work in on time. You made our job much easier.
Greg - For fixing all of the line schemes and for helping us and keeping us company during deadline time.
Megan C - For your bubbly personality. You really know how to brighten up a room!
Lindsey - For providing us with plenty of gossip. We love your crazy Alabama stories.
Ian - For doing all of the jobs that nobody else wanted to do. One line isn't enough to thank you.
Jorie - For always keeping a smile on, even when your spreads became repeatedly cursed.
Stephanie - For always doing what we asked and being so much fun in class.
Kelly - For always turning in quality work. You were a joy to have on staff.
Luke - For your sense of humor and willingness to do anything we asked of you.
Meghan K - For staying so organized and checking name after name, including those others supposedly checked. We love you!
Jay - For remaining so calm in times of desperation and for adding diversity to our staff.
Niall - For providing us with so many creative ideas and keeping us all entertained.
Caroline - For being Erica's partner in crime and scaring Suzanne with your fish.
Michelle - For being so diligent in your work. Your spreads were a pleasure to work with.
Victoria - For always volunteering to help in times of desperation and for consistently turning quality spreads in on time.
Kara - For being involved in every club on earth. You were such a vital source of information.
Mo - For being so charming and dramatic. You added so much personality to our staff.
Brad (Tigerslayer) - For being such an awesome guy and being honest when you didn't want to check names but doing it anyway.
Amanda - For dedicating so much time and energy towards the book and for checking all of those names. We love you for it!
John - For chasing down those missing names and always making us laugh. You're one crazy kid!
Claire - For keeping such a positive attitude, even when times were stressful, and for always offering to help.
Sarah - For finding all those missing names, continually impressing us with your quality work and exceeding all of our expectations.
Kathryn - For providing us with three great years of memories and laughter. Long live the "Hot Guy Wall!"

...Erica, Suzanne & Claude

learning experience guidance

As another year has come and gone, we take the time to appreciate all that made the York community so wonderfully diverse this year. Students with entirely different backgrounds and personalities took the liberty to pursue their own interests by engaging in some of York's many curricular and extracurricular activities. For instance, students who savored the thrill of competition became involved in athletics and competed in academic contests, while other students participated in clubs and organizations that allowed them to reach out directly to their fellow classmates and community. Those who wished to explore their artistic abilities participated in the fine arts and performing arts, while students of a technical mindset became involved in classes and organizations related to industrial science. Whether contributing to another state championship victory, selling tickets to the Homecoming dance, or merely exchanging smiles with friends in the hallways, each and every student managed to contribute to the spirit of York High School, which unites all of us together as a single student body and reminds us that we all bleed green. It is by acknowledging this spirit that we come to the powerful realization that despite all of our differences, we are ONE.

the colophon

thirty staff members and advisor Isadora Parrini worked with Herff-JonesYearbooks and Lifetouch-Prestige Portraits to produce the 72nd edition of Y's Tales, the York Community High School yearbook. This yearbook served as a record of all that occurred during the 2004-05 school year. The nine by twelve inch book had a press run of 2230 copies. The $32 book was purchased by 91% of the student body. The staff used nine computers with Adobe PageMaker 7.0 software to desktop publish the book. Herff-Jones Yearbooks, Inc., located in Marceline, Missouri printed the 276 page book on 100 pound Calais paper. Three signatures of formula color compliment the book. The fonts used in the book include: Angela, Belwe, Bergamo, Chantilly, Coronado, Dranna Script, Desiree, Flanders, Handel Gothic, Impact, Isabell, Onyxtype, Prispol, PALLADIO SMALL CAPS, SHOT, & SOUVENIR.
