ports, friends, and family it feels like there is not
the. We pull all-nighters to finish homework, ours with teams, hang out with friends, and with family. We push the limit just enough, ing schedules, somehow finding time to finish semester project and spend Friday night at the otball game. Although these busy and hectic schedules sometimes seem too much to bear, high school is the chance to experience this crazed excitement. It is the thrill of everything coming together, finding our place and passions. Life can get a bit chaotic, and sometimes it seems overwhelming, but in truth, who wants it any other way? Welcome to the madness:
this is our life.

WELCOME TO

Although we lead hectic lives, we still find the time to dance the night away at the Homecoming dance, travel the world over the summer, act in the school's plays, and much more. The chaos life brings gives us many opportunities and chances to grow and explore. Without this chaos our lives just wouldn't be the same.

To Wonderland and

After endless hours planning and countless meetings organizing, the big night finally arrived. The stress of getting that perfect dress, fitting into that too, arranging pre-prom pictures, and tying up all loose ends was over. It was now time to feel the anticipation and excitement for the unforgettable night!

Be

With eight hundred students attending, the breathtaking garden wonderland setting of The Crystal Gardens at Navy Pier was the perfect place to host this gala event because it set the tone of the night. Its atmosphere allowed students to escape from all their stresses and worries, and enjoy themselves the entire evening.

It was a night to spend with friends, eating, and of course dancing. However, for some like Michelle Connor, senior, just the thrill of being downtown was enough to make this special night a great one. "It was so fun being down in the city and getting all dressed up,"

Jack Guimon and Molly Griganavicius, graduates, were bestowed the honor of being named York's Prom King and Queen. As they took to the dance floor, the place erupted in cheer for the royal couple. At midnight, six hundred of the post-prom partiers geared up for the next phase of the night: a cruise on Navy Pier's The Odyssey.

As if the strolling buffet dinner was not enough, small desserts were aplenty and a variety of music played all throughout the ship. "There was great finger-food and good music on all levels," remarked Jenna Dunkle, graduate. The ongoing festivities led Alexandra Doerge, senior, to conclude, "The boat was rockin'!" Patrick Kuehnle, senior, also seemed to capture the spirit of the night by commenting, "Post prom was incredible. Nothing can beat going out on a boat with a clear view of Chicago at night."

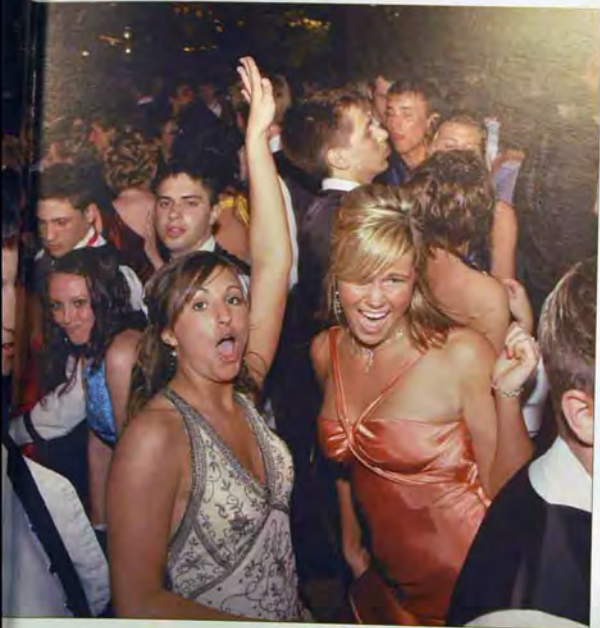

York's Student Council made the night possible. The council's graduating class of 2007 left no stone unturned. BoPing Liu, senior, detailed all of their responsibilities when he said, "We arranged the details with Navy Pier, like tables, menu, prices, and the amazing center pieces." Student Council worked hard to raise the sixty thousand dollars necessary to fund one of the most memorable events in a high school student's career. - Margaret Kenny

Where did the Time

June 4, 2006 marked the turning point for the senior class as they left behind their childhood and started their journeys to wards their future lives.

Class of '06

It felt like only yesterday was their first day of freshman year. The time went all too fast for Warren Greeley, graduate, but it also served him well. "High school is about experience and learning, York helped to prepare me to be able to survive and exceed in college and in the real world." Making new friends, laughing at teachers' mispronunciation of names, the gossip, tears and love, the class of 2006 experienced it all.

Most families arrived two to three hours early to ensure good seats. For the families, speakers and teachers gathered in the Field House emotions were high. York helped form the graduates into intelligent and responsible adults prepared for their next step. Raquel Nateras, graduate, said, "The tradition of York is tremendous; nothing can ever be compared to it."

Speaker Allison Witham, graduate, expressed the duality of the day when she said "these last four-years are mere memory." Remembering their high school experience helped to ease the sadness for graduates' departure from many of their childhood friends. Witham told her fellow classmates "Life happened; it is made up of opportunities and observations."

"Talent alone won't make you a success," Superintendent Dr. Joel Morris said. He spoke of how the graduates needed to use the knowledge and experiences they gained from their years at York in the real world. Morris said, "There is no cookie cutter to be successful."

The moments shared by friends and classmates were now a mere memory. As graduate Jacob Wolfe said, "Look around, look at how well we've all come to know each other." Lifelong friends parted to embark on their journey of departure and start their lives. "Our paths may never cross again so remember that you have been given a chance to control your life, so 'carpe diem' - seize the day," Wolfe told his graduating class. - Claire Sheridan

But Summer Had

School was out for summer, but in the blink of an eye, it was all over and yet another year was about to begin...

Only

It was hot, hot, hot, but during summer 2006, students did not let the heat stop them. Between work and play, every minute of summer was packed with things to do from June 7th until August 28th.

The work aspect of summer may not have been everyone's favorite part, but it was a necessity. Having a job was important for many people because as Jordan Gales, junior, said, "You need the money to take out the hunnies!"

Others found even more kinds of work and were students again during their so-called summer vacation. Although their time off was spent back in the classroom, students like Anthony Nelson, junior, said, "Summer school was a good way to get credit for classes I didn't want to take during the year. It made my junior year easier."

Opposing the work, fun, of course, crazed the students' schedule. Some went on mission trips to help those in need. One of these students,

Matthew Josephs, sophomore, went to Dover, Delaware on Group Work Camp with his church's youth group. He said, "Being surrounded by 350 other high schoolers, in a gym packed shoulder to shoulder, all there for a single purpose—to help the less fortunate—was the greatest experience of my summer."

Concerts were yet another way to fill the days with fun. Jessica Andrews, senior, went to a Dave Matthews Band concert. She said, "It was the best part of my summer. Being up in my friend's lake house in Wisconsin with a huge group of my closest friends for the two day concert made this summer unforgettable."

Summer was a time, although meant for relaxation, that still managed to fill and craze the schedules of many. Through all that hard work and play, there truly was only one word to sum up summer, and Rebecca Harding, senior, said it best: "Amazing!"

All Work But Still

Students could be hired as jugglers in the circus with their amazing ability to juggle school, work, and friends.

For many students the 3:11 dismissal bell is not a chance to go home and relax. While some kids are able to go home, others are working away at a local job to put a little money in their pockets.

Managing everything in life was difficult for some. Students found ways to compensate, however. "Sometimes I can get my homework done at work, but mostly I try to keep my week hours to a minimum. It's usually not too hard to keep everything under control," said Kelly DiFrancesca, senior, who had her first job at the Courts Plus. While there were stressful times, students were mostly able to keep up with the pressure.

Having a job certainly had its perks. "Yes, the money is nice. I spend it any time I want to go out with friends,"

Kelly Deatsch, senior, explained. Students eagerly looked forward to the times they were able to go out and have a little fun with the money they worked hard to earn.

Somewhat surprisingly, money was not all these hard workers cared about. Joanna McEvoy, senior, spoke about the delights of working with kids at Talbot's Kids. "I love my job because it's so cute to see all the little kids come in and look at the different clothes."

Though skipping out on an occasional Friday night wasn't really fun, work provided students with a steady income of cash, as well as rewarding experiences. Often seeing the look on happy customers' faces was enough to keep a student in a job; other times, feeling their own happiness on pay day covered that. - Catherine Byrne

It's All About

Homecoming has more to it than just the dance or the game; the week leading up to that culmination of events is what unites the student body in a sea of school spirit, preparing to "Come Sail Away."

The Spirit

Homecoming week is all about school spirit. When you add up all the themed spirit days, King and Queen of the Couch, the lunchroom contests and activities, the hallway decorating contest, and the pep rally, all leading up to the stands-packed Homecoming game, what you get is "wow," as Robert Kenny, freshman, said when asked about his first impressions of Homecoming week.

The spirit days during Homecoming Week filled the halls with wacky and unpredictably dressed students and teachers. One found sleeping beauties on Monday for "Pajama Day" and returned on Tuesday to find the school divided into black, orange, blue, and pink for "Class Color Day." The student body once again united as sailors and pirates for "Seaworthy Wednesday." Thursday made the Greeks proud as the school sported their togas. Friday completed the madness when the halls, filled with students, were lit with bright green and white.

King and Queen of the Couch reigned as the biggest competition during Homecoming Week. Seniors "duked" it out to be the ones on the field during the game that Friday. Macenzie Tovey, senior, said his group, the "Dukes of Hazzard," ran in the competition because "we wanted our spirit to be known throughout the entire school."

To add to the spirit, StuCo's spirit week committee created the lunch time activities to boost the spirit. They accomplished their goal. Junior Margaret Regan, StuCo member, said the spirit for Homecoming Week 2006 was "higher than ever before." Between the pie eating contest, hula hooping, arm wrestling, and freeze dance, the lunchtime activities attracted crowds of York spirit.

Friday topped it all off. Various sports and clubs decorated the hallways from floor to ceiling. Drama won the title as "Best Hallway" for the second year in a row. According to Keith Potts, junior, the club worked hard to make their theme, the "Dukes of the Caribbean," work. They incorporated sea and sailing-related plays into their hallway and pulled off yet another victory, showing off that Duke pride.

Also on Friday, the pep rally prepared the student body for the game that night. StuCo announced the winners of King and Queen of the Couch as the "Dukes of Hazzard." Tovey's group clearly is the school know of their spirit. This spirit got the Dukes of Hazzard on the field at the Homecoming game that night. Tovey described that feeling as an "adrenaline rush." Like many in the crowd, these Kings personified the "Go Green, Go White" chants of the crowd with their painted bodies, which exclaimed the spirit York showed all week long. Homecoming week was the definition of spirit. - Kristina Albarello

She appears and everyone in the room fuses over how beautiful the young couple looks together. The two pose in their formal wear for priceless photos then hurry off to the school which has been transformed from the ordinary commons to an elegant setting. The music inside is blaring and everyone is having a blast dancing to the beat. She quickly throws off her designer shoes and he loosens his tie and then both jump into the crowd to dance the night away. This is Homecoming night, a time full of dancing, laughter, and memories.

"Homecoming is something that everybody should try to go to at least once," said Catherine Varnas, senior. "Every year is different but each is memorable in its own way. For instance this year I didn't enjoy the music choices but still had a lot of fun dancing because of the people I was with." Homecoming took on a nautical note with the Styx hit song "Come Sail Away" as the theme. Over a thousand students showed up in their finest to meet up with their friends and spend the night sailing across the dance floor. Endless hours were put into making this magical night possible on both the faculty's and students' part. "It's always really chaotic getting ready for Homecoming," said Brigid Baker, sophomore. "I'm on student council and we put in tons of time to make this night happen." Homecoming 2006 was a time that will be remembered by all who attended. It sent the seniors home with happy memories and gave the rest of the student body something to look forward to for next year.

The People Who

Friends: The people making your world a little bit less mad...

know you

Best

While school may be chaotic with projects, endless English essays, numerous true basic assignments, and never-ending sports activities taking up a majority of free time, there are always friends to make this chaotic lifestyle a little better. Whether worried about taking a big history test tomorrow, or starting in a soccer game, friends are always there to make the madness that is high school a little bit less crazy.

The people one listens to most are ones friends. "My friends mean the world to me," said Danielle Jungst, junior. Friends were more than just people to hang out with on a Friday or a Saturday. They became more like siblings, helping out with all of life's dilemmas.

Friends were there throughout high school joining in on the fun. Whether it was Homecoming, parties, or just hanging out, friends always made things more memorable. Although the madness and chaos that was high school sometimes tested those friendships, many survived and became stronger as a result. One thing was certain: friends helped to manage the chaos of high school and make the madness manageable. — Courtney Grob

We Bleed Green

The athletes who compete are only the beginning of York spirit. The fans are the ones who complete it.

A sea of green floods the gymnasium, the crowd is so loud that one cannot make out what others are saying; let alone what one is thinking. Mr. Rob Wagner, the ringleader roars into the crowd, amplifying his voice with a megaphone - he could not be heard otherwise. He then continues the annual tradition of asking to hear the spirit from each grade level. The same thing happens every year. The young, bashful, and self-conscious freshmen are somewhat hesitant but still manage to produce a dull roar. The sophomores, who get away with only dressing up on green and white, are as loud but still receive jeers from upperclassmen across the gym. The juniors are pumped up and excited but their cheer will be similar; the boos are minimal, and the echo sounds from the bleachers that is created. The seniors write a whole different story. Mr. Wagner does not even get to finish saying the word senior when the gym erupts in total chaos and the bleachers begin to shake.

The spirit of the York fans does not only reside in the gymnasium. Each Friday night the fans filled up the stands, whether it was at Clarence D. East Field, across the street, or an hour away during those intense playoff games. There was no favoritism towards any sport; the fans would attend as many games as possible. Wherever there was a sporting event where York was included, the loyal fans, decked out in green, would be seen overflowing the fan section.

This year's fans not only intimidated the opponent but gave a boost of confidence to athletes performing for York. Teams traveled to York with fear in their eyes, for they had seen the crazy fans tailgating at York. Other fans were not nearly as loud as early as pumped up as York fans. Give integrity, senior, and bragging rights to York's defense. It really gets everyone pumped up to we can support the team." Tailgating rituals include playing bags, word cup soccer, and eating a whole lot of food. When asked about how vital fans are to the success of a team, Andrew Bonarich, senior, said "the fans play a huge role, looking into the crowd and not being able to hear anything but complete chaos from the stands gets my adrenaline going."

Whether it be in or on the field, court, pool, track, golf course, baseball diamond, or bowling alley, York fans will always be cheering and supporting York's athletes whether they hit a homerun or strikeout. John Bretl

The Quest For

Every year more than three million Americans take part in Relay for Life.

Hundreds of people gathered around the track. Tents covered the grass with place markers for different campsites. Loudspeakers blared the sounds of local bands like the Villains of Verona and the wild mixes from DJ's. What was once the York football field was turned into a gathering of people, young and old, with one goal: raise money to find a cure for the second most common cause of death in the United States—cancer.

Relay for Life is a yearly fundraising event that more than three million Americans take part in, including many York students. At the overnight event, members of each team walk around a track at all times to raise money for the American Cancer Society. At dusk, luminaries, candles with bags over them, light the way around the track. Each lumina represents a loved one who has been affected by cancer.

Relay teams prepared for the event months ahead of time in order to make the night a success. Everything from fundraising to costume themes were planned. Despite the fun of the music and crazy activities, they were not what attracted people to come back and participate in Relay for a second, or even third year. "I have done Relay for Life for the past three years and every year it gets better. I feel like I accomplish a lot and like I am really making a difference," said Kyle Stipe, senior.

In the morning, tired, yet determined walkers continued trekking around the track for what seemed like the thousandth lap, until the final bell went off. Cries of joy and sadness as well as hugs were seen all around, as another successful Relay for Life came and went in what seemed like a flash. —Tracie Widmaier

This Time the Girls

Over 1200 students attended Drops of Jupiter, Turnabout '06, making it one of the most well attended York dances to date.

Wear the Pajamas

Let's face it, guys have it easy. They don't need to deal with getting ready in the morning, putting make up on or matching clothes (although surprisingly enough, many guys match their shoes to what they're wearing). Guys especially don't have to fret about school dances. With the Homecoming and Prom dances approaching, all of those girls who actually want dates to York's dancing functions are secretly squirming on the inside hoping, wishing, and waiting for that one guy to ask them in a cute way to that special dance.

But not this time. No, this time it's the guys' turn to feel vulnerable while waiting for their girl to ask them to Turnabout, because who wants to go to Turnabout dateless?

Luckily for the guys, plenty of girls wore the pants for the evening (figuratively, of course) and asked, "Would you like to go to Turnabout with me?" And plenty of guys said yes. In fact, about 1200 students attended this year's dance, themed Drops of Jupiter, held on February 18th, 2006. That's 200 more than the 2005 romp.

The 2nd annual Snowcoming Spirit Week was also held the week of Turnabout, but with much better results than the previous year. Spirit took over the school, where students and faculty alike dressed in pajamas, pink, and planets. As a smashing end to Spirit Week, Friday night was the annual Teacher vs. Student basketball game. Unfortunately for the students, the teachers came out victorious.

As five o'clock Saturday rolled around, the girls were just finishing getting ready as the boys were just starting to get ready (hey, some things will never change) for a night dancing with the stars. Victoria Messina

"Ride that pony!" over three hundred students sing. These students attended a three-day retreat at camp Timber-lee in Wisconsin. Students and staff worked hard for many months to put together this retreat. "I'm expecting Operation Snowball to be a blast! The leaders we have this year are very involved and organized and we have planned a fun time for everyone," said group leader Emma LaPalermo, junior. "Operation Snowball is a time when kids can get away from the stereotypes of high school, be themselves, hear positive messages, and have fun," said Ben Sharko, senior. The students got to listen to speakers who talked about being positive and making the right choices. Beside the speakers, Snowballers also had time for small group discussions and fun games. The presenters selected for Operation Snowball were The Busa family, an African American drum family; MWAH!, a group that sang and danced for Snowballers; a paraplegic Olympian, Lloyd Bachrach, who talked about how everyone has struggles in life; Tommy Nugent, a magician to entertain; Coach D, who talked about being your best; and representatives from AAIM, the Alliance Against Intoxicated Motorists. "The speakers really made you think about the way you live your life and how to change yourself to be a better person," said Stephanie Strejcek, junior.

Students and staff had a great time on the retreat. "The weekend was a really fun and eye-opening experience about things you don't normally think about every day. Things the speakers said made you think about how choices affect you. It was definitely a good weekend and every person should go to Snowball at least once," said Strejcek. -Kathleen McCall

York's Fine Arts Program includes many talented students, from their art skills to their performances.

From break dancing at the talent show to painting sunsets, York students display phenomenal fine arts skills. Students experience art in a variety of areas such as painting, drawing, sculpting, singing, and instrumentals.

Fine Arts Week was a very important one for all students, but especially those involved in art classes. In the AP Art class, students: "are working on a college level, expected to work at a higher level of motivation to have the highest level of skills both artistically and problem solving skills," said Mr. Tom Wolfe.

Portfolios, a collection of students' artwork are submitted into a national competition. In one week 20,000 portfolios are judged and graded from one to six (six being the highest). Three judges review each portfolio and the best kids in the country get chosen.

Another popular aspect of fine arts week is the talent show, which gives students the opportunity to flaunt their talents. Four shows, twenty-nine acts, and over one hundred participants performed in the, "wonderful and eclectic talent that we have at this school," said Mr. Curt Merrill.

Preparing for the show is one of the most chaotic things about the talent show. Behind the scenes, "included making sure that the show runs efficiently on a very tight time schedule, getting all of the sound and lights needs just right and calming the nerves of the performers" said Mr. Merrill.

A Look into their

From Under the Milk Wood was the spring play about a day in the life of all the wacky people living in the small fishing town called Lloreggub.

From the backstage dance parties to the crazy characters and ghosts, last year's spring play, "From Under the Milk Wood," had it all. Originally based off a radio show written by Dylan Thomas, this production was about wacky people living in a small fishing town.

The production showed the audience what a day in the life of a small town was like. The play was told from the point of view of Blind Character Captain Cat. Unlike many other productions York Drama has put forth, there was only one main role, Captain Cat, played by senior Jose Nateras. The other roles were smaller, and in fact, many of the other cast members played more than one role, some even played three different characters.

Since "From Under the Milk Wood" was originally a radio show but was changed into a drama production, some challenges presented themselves. The crew had to make all of the blocking (the movement patterns of the characters across the stage) and the set designs themselves, which called for many late nights.

Most of the cast members said their favorite part of being involved in York Drama is spending time with their drama friends, or 'drama family.' Meghan Dolan, senior, said, "Everyone's amazing. We've been spending so much time together that we're like one big family now." - Tracie Widmaier

Love and power struggles come together in the production of the play, A Midsummer Night's Dream, originally written by Shakespeare. The cast members spent their summer vacation practicing five days a week for a minimum of three hours a day. Some lead performers in the musical were Keith Potts and Samantha Moore, juniors and Shanna Cardea and Jose Nateras, seniors, as well as many other students.

In comparison to shows put on throughout the school year, the summer play gave more students a chance to participate. "It also created bonding friendships. The summer shows give the actors an opportunity to become better friends than they were before and meet new people," said Margaret Deady, senior. Seventy cast members participated, along with the help of two alumni, Courtney Knysch and Sarah Wilbur. Some of the highlights of the show included an original drum score and an engaging tribal dance which contributed to the record breaking attendance for a non-musical performance.

Both onstage and off, many aspects of the show proved to be "pure excitement", said Nateras, senior. One such thing was the cast members leaping through trap doors to make their entrances on stage.

The cast demonstrated great unity despite the madness involved in preparation for the successful play. "I always think it's great that the incoming freshmen get to work with the outgoing seniors", said Mr. John Forsythe, director.

York Drama has put on a variety of shows over the years, but none quite like this one. Held November 16 through the 19, the 2006 fall production, written by A.R. Gurney, was called The Dining Room, and that's exactly where it took place—throughout the entire show. Stage manager Katie Mundle, junior, described it best when she said "The Dining Room was a cultural show that explored different family traditions as society changed."

Although the set never altered, the time period did. Margaret Deady, senior, said, "This play was different because of the wide time line. It would change from modern times to the 20's, the 50's, and then back down to the Great Depression era." The audience could see the transitions over time showing the way in which a dining room was used in earlier decades and how it is used today.

What made this show truly different was the cast. With around thirty people in the show (a large number for a non-musical play), no one was on stage more than twice. Each actor had his or her own scene that he or she shared with one other person. The pair then got to make it their own and explore their characters in depth.

Seventy years ago, rich families from New York would have meals and eat breakfast together in the mornings and talk about the Great War before heading off to work. Nowadays, the dining room collects dust or is used as a desk, except for the rare holiday dinner with grandma who herself used to sit at that table every day. The Dining Room showed how family values have changed and society along with it. - Madeline Brodt and Victoria Messina

This year's winter drama production, Reserve Two For Murder, was unlike any previous York High School drama production.

Killer

For each play, the qualities needed to produce it are different. What made this play special was that the cast included the audience multiple times in the show and crossed the line between the players and the audience. Reserve Two For Murder was set in the 1950s, and started out with some cast members on stage, putting on a play within a play. However, all of a sudden there was a blackout in the theatre. When the lights turned back on, one character was dead. Now the scent of murder was in the air.

Throughout the production there were challenges to figuring out who committed the crime. Between a bumbling detective, played by Riley Farrell, sophomore, and a smart sidekick, played by Manu Edakara, freshman, they tried to pin down who did the deed.

The play was not done in all casual and simple ways, though. Junior Amy Davelis said, "There was a lot of energy going into this show. There was so much that I became exhausted, and fell asleep on stage." Aside from the actual production, Veronica Parker, junior, said, "Practice were incredibly busy, and there wasn't any time for homework, but the dinner breaks helped out a lot." Davelis agreed, and added that, "Pixi Snicks kept the production together really well." That just goes to show that candy, friendship, hardwork, and a murder mystery turned out to be the perfect mixture for the winter play. - Monica Arcaro

Spring time, the time when short skirts, tank tops, and tanned legs come out. Not only that, but the spring dance arrives. The Return of the Black Light dance, minus the black lights. Last year's Black Light themed dance was popular amongst students, so StuCo brought the theme back this year. "The dance was a lot of fun, but the DJ's forgot to bring the black lights, and the theme was Black Light dance," said Hannah Vatch, senior. The song for the dance was the techno song "Every Time We Touch" by Cascada. "They played lots of techno music, I got my groove on," said Vatch.

Everyone had a good time, even without the black lights. Some people even went way out for the dance. People were wearing some crazy outfits. There was even one kid wearing a unitard. It was kinda creepy but he looked like he was having a good time," said James Taylor, senior.

So many people showed up for the dance, it almost broke a school record. "The theme song was 'Every-time We Touch' and it's funny because everyone was touching because it was so crowded!" said Jamie Whittenburg, junior. "It was really, really warm too. People were sweating and the dance was like a sauna," said Whittenburg.

The spring dance proved to be a hit. "I met a total hottie there and I got her phone number, it was a great night!" said Mathew Cook, senior. "The girls were great!" Cook said. This year topped it off. - Jenna Lindman

Fat Tuesday A Few

Students spent a night eating, dancing, and laughing with their friends in early December, acting as though it was Mardi Gras in New Orleans.

This past December provided students with an opportunity to get dressed up and enjoy dinner, dancing, and laughter with friends. Many students attended the third annual Laugh for Life benefit, this time with proceeds going to help Darfur and Hurricane Katrina victims.

Everyone attending the event gathered in the commons at 6:30 p.m. There was a definite feeling of excitement in the air. Eric Krolkiewicz, senior, said he was excited for Laugh for Life because "he heard such great things about it from people who had attended the past two years."

The theme of "Mardi Gras" helped aid the excitement. The commons was decked out with beads, glitter, and colorful balloons. Jack Haeger, senior, said, "the decorations made me feel like I stepped right into New Orleans."

The night started off with a nice dinner, followed by a jazz band, which gave the students a chance to show off their moves. Even those not so thrilled about dancing had a good time. Matthew Kipnis, senior, said, "I was tragically bamboozled into dancing, but it turned out to be a really great time." No one could resist the classy music played by the band. After dancing came performances by two comedians.

Much planning went into making Laugh for Life happen. Kacey Bourdage, senior, had a lot to do with the planning committee. In order to plan for the event, Kacey said, "I had to attend many meetings 8th period, and advertising took a long time." With any luck, Laugh for Life will continue for years to come, giving students the chance for a truly wonderful experience.

Dukes Around the

The Dukes went to England, Italy, Ireland, Scotland, China, The Dominican Republic, and Nicaragua- all around the world.

Where in the world are the York Dukes? The answer is everywhere. This summer students went to exotic countries such as China, Italy, Nicaragua, Ireland, Scotland, and the Dominican Republic. While there, each of them had some amazing experiences.

Kayla Chen, junior, went to Beijing, China. She saw her family and friends, plus she got the chance to meet some new people. She said, "I met many fun, crazy, and amazing teens at the summer camp I was at." Kayla also learned a little bit about China and its culture. When asked if she would go back, Kayla replied "It's a country with so much life and great people. I definitely recommend going there."

While Kayla was partying in Beijing, Sarah DidDominick, sophomore, was exploring Italy. Sarah traveled to some cities including Florence, Pisa, and Rome. Even though traveling there took a long time, Sarah thought it was worth the wait. Once she was there, she spent most of her time sightseeing. She said, "Venice was a lot different than Elmhurst because there are no cars- just boats- so it was much more peaceful." Sarah even got the chance to ride in a gondola herself.

Nicole Sementa, senior, also went to Italy, but on a class trip with a few other York students. The group traveled all over Italy, and Nicole met kids from other American schools. Overall, she had an amazing trip. She had such a good time that she said, "I want to study abroad there and live there for a few years."

Erin Dunne, senior, went on a mission trip to the Dominican Republic and Nicaragua this summer. While there, she helped the community by mixing and laying cement, digging holes for outhouses, and becoming a godmother to a one-year-old baby there. The experience was rewarding. She said "The kids have nothing, yet they were so grateful." Because of the trip, Erin has a new outlook on life. She said "I look at everything differently. I don't need material things to be happy."

Elizabeth Hickey, senior, went to Ireland, England, and Scotland this summer. Even though it was cold, she still managed to have a good time. The parts of the trip that stuck out in her mind were the football games. She said "The football games were amazing. There was so much energy and everyone was having a good time."

These students had a great time this summer. Traveling allowed them to see a different part of the world and learn a little bit about the culture. They had some memorable moments and cannot wait to travel again. -Shannon Rohn

Ice

"I hear the sound of our skates and sticks scraping against the ice. I hear bodies slamming against the boards, and I see the puck flying into the back of the net," said Reno DeSimone, junior. Hockey seems to be an activity that some pass up on or some take part in, because of the exciting or potentially painful events that happen during a game or practice. Players are in this not only for all the action, they are also in it for each other and the great times they have. Michael Hlavacek, junior, said, "The guys playing this year are a lot of fun. We're serious when we need to be serious, but we always make time for fun."

The teams were divided up into junior varsity and varsity, with freshmen and sophomores mostly making up junior varsity, and juniors and seniors mostly making up the varsity team. "Our team this year has a really great atmosphere. I'm pretty excited to see our team and our progress, because in the beginning of the season, we were already ranked fifteenth in state," said Michael Hlavacek, junior.

Even though hockey is a mind-grueling and physically-demanding sport, it is for this reason that it is played by boys of all different ages who crazily enjoy throwing themselves into the game. The thrill of victory tastes so sweet but comes only after hours of practicing. We spend countless hours each week with our second family: the team. Sports add so much chaos to already busy schedules, but more importantly, they serve as an outlet. Sports help us escape from the madness but at the same time add to the madness. This is what makes sports so exciting, pushing the limits and striving for excellence, this is the reason we love competing as Dukes.

Simply Smashing It...

One of the goals of the 2006 Badminton team was to place third in conference. They met that goal. The team also wanted to win their sectional. And they achieved that goal as well. This did not just happen over night, though. Every girl on that team worked hard and diligently during their practices to obtain these goals. According to Amanda Mulliner, senior, "A typical practice consists of some footwork, drills, and then match play." Obviously their hard work paid off, as demonstrated by their success in the season.

Another contributor to the team's success was their attitude and team spirit. This was evident when almost everyone on badminton went to cheer on the girls at sectionals. Their team spirit was contagious. Molly Stein, senior, said, "The team was supportive, competitive, and hardworking." The team was led by Ms. Gina Fite and Mr. Trent Bodine. The team captains were Veronica Pollack, Lisa Desjardins, and Amanda Mulliner.

It wasn't all work and no play. The girls often fit Pompei runs and pasta parties into their routine. Through all the time they spent together playing badminton some long lasting friendship bonds were made. As Amanda Gratzianina, junior, put it, "There were no age differences. Everyone got along." - Courtney Grob

Baseball a game which originated in ancient times. This game may look easy but just like any sport it takes years to master. The baseball team knows all about the game from experience. Most of the players have been playing for many years. Senior and captain Kevin Sullivan said, "I've been playing for...um twelve years." Junior Adam Klinger said, "I've been playing since I was two; T-ball baby."

The team as a whole has overcome many obstacles, the biggest of which was having a new. The team clearly benefitted from the change. When asked what the new coach brought to the program, Junior Adam Klinger responded, "a better understanding of the game." Coach Phillip Bodine had been teaching and coaching for sixteen years and he brought with him a different view on the game. Coach Bodine said, "I think brought a sense of importance equal to football, basketball, and cross country."

Senior Alex LoCicero said, "We are focused and work hard which is due to the coaches love and commitment to baseball." It is apparent that the new coach has had an impact on the team. Coach Bodine has accomplished what he set out to do. To those who want to be on the varsity team, senior David Burchfield had a message: "Get ready to run." - Stephannie Aguilera

Parallel: Not Just A

Math Term

With adrenaline rushing through his body, only one thought is going through his mind "just this one last trick and I'm done." The thrill of doing his favorite event: high bar, and performing his most difficult series of skills in front of one hundred people brings a feeling that he is invincible. Out of the corner of his eye, he sees his teammate warming up on pommel horse, and in the background, his parents, wide-eyed with excitement and nerves. In a moment of sheer terror and excitement, knowing this last moment will decide if he places 1st or 5th, he releases his hands from the bar and performs a dismount envied by the many teenage gymnasts present, all for the same reason. He sticks his landing, the crowd goes wild, and he thinks to himself, "I did it."

The boys' gymnastics team spent the past year working hard to once again show the school and community what they were made of as a team: champions. Practices were nothing but organized chaos, and through the chaos came a season of wonderful achievements. During a single practice, the team got various things done. They perfected their tricks, which involve tumbling, the bar, etc, typically the most difficult aspect to master. After this, they would worked on the routines they were to perform at the upcoming competition, which could be any of the six main events: pommel horse, parallel bars, floor, high-bar, vault, and rings.

Meets were frequently hosted by York, but gymnastics meets were a lot more complex and hectic to put on than the average football game. The team had many extra responsibilities- which could have been setting up the many pieces of equipment, which are mats, bars, the rings, and judging tables, and welcoming their fellow competitors.

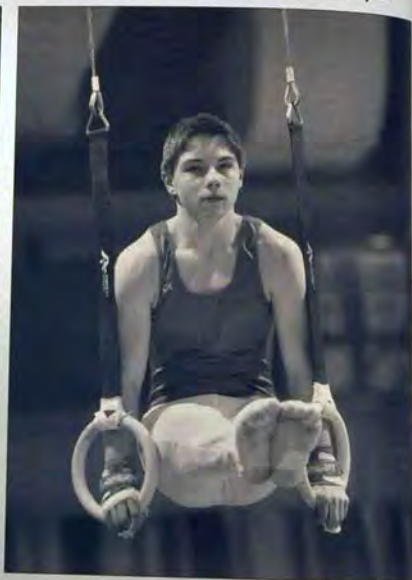

This year, every single moment of hardwork the boys put into practice was redeemed when not just one, but two members of the team qualified and placed- in the state competition. With senior Luke Kahoveck and Junior Christian Carmona both competing, York was a name to be feared. Kahoveck placed second with his floor routine, and Carmona placed second by showing off his skills on the rings.

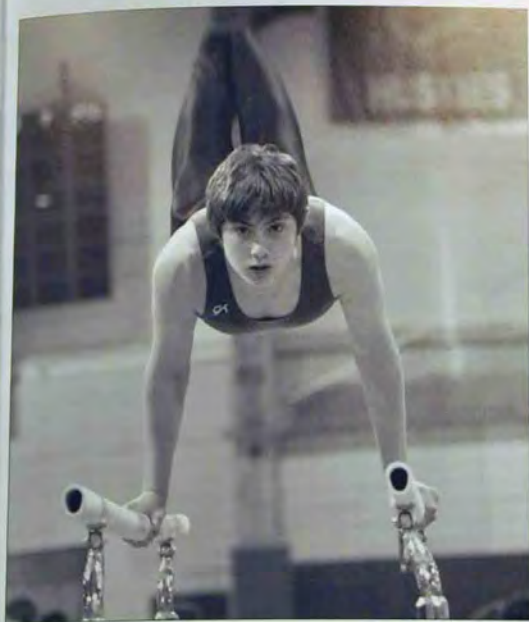

The captains were graduates Nate Webb and Justin Gross, who, along with coach Mr. Richard Larsen, were in charge of keeping up team morale and making sure practices and meets ran smoothly- which greatly contributed to their successful season. Dennis Grossklax, junior, said "It's a brutal sport- you're always hurting, its usually in your hands because of the rips, but it's a lot of fun, and the feeling you get from the end result of all your hard work is always worth it." - Amanda Simo

Pump It Up

The 2006 girls' soccer team started the season with a brand new coach. Ms. Kelly Neidig brought the team to high spirits as they began the season. Ms. Neidig is not new to the game of soccer and was able to connect with the girls as they played. Rosa Andreuccetti, senior, explained, "It's good to know that your coach knows how you feel when you're playing, they know when you're tired and she really sees us eye to eye on the field."

Even before their first game the team was faced with a dilemma that would affect their season. Katherine Jablonski and Audrey Holmer, graduates, both suffered injuries that ended their senior seasons. Jablonski explained how she got her injury, "I tore two ligaments in my knee as well as chipped the bone early in my winter indoor soccer season; I was disappointed to find out that I couldn't play for the rest of the year."

Jablonski's and Holmer's injuries did not stop them from trying to be a part of the team. "We both attended as many practices as we could, and even had team jerseys; we tried our best to help out the other girls," Jablonski explained. The girls looked forward to the support of the teammates and included them as part of the team.

Before each game the girls huddle up, and shout out any Duke cheer they think up, and pump themselves up. "The thing I will most remember about this soccer season is when our captain, Molly, started the cheer before the game," said Michelle Corbett, junior.

There season ended well, their outcome was better than they expected and they won more than they lost. It didn't matter if they won or lost, the dedication of these girls said it all. - Christine Sears

diamonds

Diamonds are a girl's best friend so say lyrics from a familiar song. York's softball team shone like diamonds on the field with their spectacular performance. To them softball diamonds are their best friend.

The team, captained by Elizabeth Malone, junior, and Gina Knutson, sophomore, played well. Against their rival Oak Park River Forest, the Lady Dukes gave everything. During the hectic game they scored one home run, the only one scored. The team improved a lot over the course of the season. In the first fourteen games the Dukes were out scored. The next fourteen they won. The Dukes finished 2-6 in the Western Suburban Conference.

Several team members were inexperienced and underclassmen. As always when learning how to do anything new, mistakes were made. The team fixed the mistakes quickly. Mr. Dave Williams said, "They are typically mistakes you make on a freshman team, but as our record shows we are improving and it's exciting to see growth in them."

It was hard managing to get everything done every day. The closest field was fifteen minutes away, and the bus ride was time that could have been used practicing. To be able to get everything done the team was always in a mad rush. There were funny moments during the season as well. Once when JV team was in a huddle and a dog randomly burst into the huddle. The team burst out laughing and then continued strategizing. Another funny moment occurred when Natalie Paus, junior, was so into catching a pop fly that she accidentally ran into a chain link fence.

The team made so many improvements over the season. This is even evident by the song that they sang on the way to the games: "I Try" by Macy Gray. - Madeline Brodt

Not Out For Love

When the sport of tennis comes to mind, so do white uniforms and sunny, cloudless days. However, the spotless idea of the sport might change after watching a match. The athletic players who practiced intensely at Beren's park every day could change the idea of those clean white uniforms, and those bright, sunny, cloudless days; they could be replaced with the windy and cold conditions that the York boys had to face during the outdoor season.

Thirty-three players composed the team. Nine returning letter winners brought experience, and new, younger players joined them with hard-working attitudes. Patrick Kuehnle, senior, said, "We have some new players and other players practiced a lot over the winter and summer."

At practice, the team worked at drills and played games. Jacob Bogolia, sophomore, said, "The coaches would let us play and then step in if they saw a problem. It's a really cool system that seems to work." Sometimes, the team competed against each other. The team competed in both singles and doubles matches. After some games, the team members grilled. These barbecues promoted team unity and offered a chance for everyone to have a good time with some good food.

Mr. Bill Sir's goal for the team was "to be the best that we could be at the end of the year." With a record of 12-10, they accomplished that goal.

Catch, If You Em', Can

The boy's track team, well known for its long history of excellence, enjoyed a victorious 2006 season. Throughout the span of the entire season, the team defended an undefeated record, and in post season they placed third in the state meet in May. In addition to succeeding in meets, the team succeeded in creating a unified environment for over two hundred athletes.

At the beginning of each practice, the entire team met in the field house with their coaches for a team meeting. Here they discussed the results from previous meets, and, as a team, selected one member who displayed exceptional performance at the meet to receive a trophy.

No specific team members held the title of captain; instead, Mr. Stan Reddel said, "All seniors are expected to step up and play the role of captains. With so many athletes, it's impossible to pick just a few."

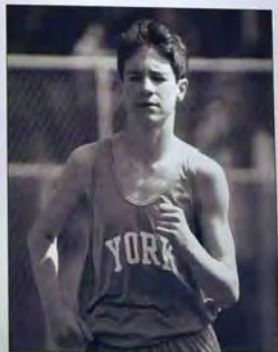

In addition to the flawless record, the team also established a unified environment for all members. Reed Sundberg, senior, said, "Track is like a family. Everyone is nice, everyone is there to help, and the coaches pay attention to everyone."

Five months a year, six days a week, three hours a day, the York Girls' Track and Field team pushed themselves through all the challenges they faced as a team.

The girls put a lot of work into the team and were rewarded by dropping times, gaining distance, and jumping higher, as well as gaining more experience in their field. Head coach Ms. Annette Schulte described the team as, "hardworking, with awesome attitudes, and resilient." There were many unfortunate circumstances that impacted the team—from graduate Molly Sullivan's stress fractures to graduate Jenna Silver's sprained ankle a week before the conference meet, but these mishaps enabled other girls to step up and fill the shoes.

The girls went through a rough year filled with challenges and illness. "I enjoyed watching the athletes challenge themselves and fight through adversity to success—whether it is a personal best or a team championship," said Schulte. The throwers had a difficult time adjusting to their new coach, but were able to throw amazing distances, and step up to take the place of the many graduates they lost.

The girls had a season that was longer than most other sports, spanning from mid-January all the way to May, and they put their best efforts in every day until the end. Junior Margaret Sack won the 3200 meter run in Champaign, graduate Jessica LeDonne won the long jump and triple jump at Sectionals and graduate Jenna Silver broke her own record and threw 43' 6 1/2".

Many other girls were able to step up and perform exceptionally, including sophomores Shreya Singh, Maureen Dammi and Emily Hagenaars, juniors Kimberley Scudder, Christine Saenz and Stephanie Maletich and seniors Michelle Conner, Claire Sheridan and Caitlin Roberts.

With all the hardships the girls went through, they did well overall. Varsity placed fourth in indoor conference and fifth in outdoor conference. They placed third in the West Suburban Conference. Overall they had sixty-two wins and only fifteen losses. -Rakhi Shah

The Kings Of Access!

Perseverance, dedication, teamwork, and work ethic all describe the boys' volleyball team. Kyle Stipe, senior, said of the team, "We practice like we play. We always work hard and practice with 100 percent intensity." The entire team consisted of fifty-five boys, including the fifteen varsity members who competed on four different levels. All members of the team spent more than two hours per day, six days a week preparing for a successful season.

The team faced a difficult conference with six strong teams including their rivals Oak Park River Forest. Patrick Vandenberg, graduate said, "We faced a lot of tough teams this year but we train hard and play hard. When you try to practice perfection every day it pays off." With the leadership of varsity standouts Vandenberg and John Pyne, graduate, the boys went 17 and 19 last season.

Although volleyball was important it wasn't all about winning on the court to these athletes. Ms. Patty Iverson said of the boys, "They work hard and take the sport seriously but also try their best off the court. These guys try to be great people in their daily lives."

The members of the team played simply because they loved the sport and it is that passion that inspired them to compete. "We just love to play and want to represent the Dukes in a good way," said Stipe. "It's really all about the rush of playing."

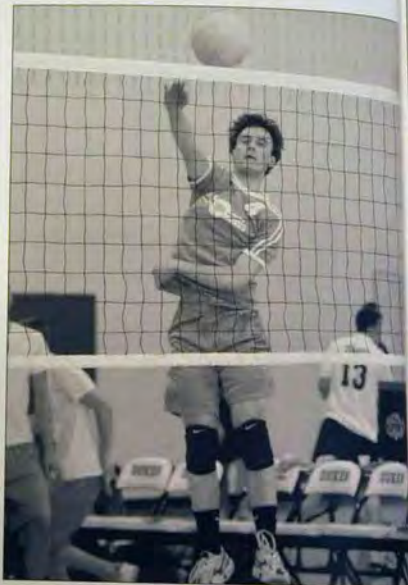

"The boys work very well together. They motivate each other well and help encourage each other in the tough workouts. Our goal as a team was to improve each week and I think we accomplished that this season," said Ms. Iverson. The volleyball team set an example of what sports are all about.

Water Wars

A game of water polo is like a battle. Imagine a warrior nearly drowning every time he attempts to throw the ball because his opponent is dragging him down. As he gasps for breath, he feels the feet of his opponent digging into his ribs. Finally, he is able to come up for air just in time to see his team score the winning goal. He smiles as he experiences the sweet, sweet sensation of victory.

In conference, the boys' water polo team beat rivals Hinsdale Central and during sectionals they defeated Riverside-Brookfield. However, they lost to Fenwick, who went on to win state. The captains, Spencer Kinney, Zachary Zusag, and Joseph Lambert, graduates, ran a tight ship. According to Benjamin Herrmann, junior, the practices included a lot of swimming and treading water, along with many scrimmages.

Zusag said his favorite part of playing water polo was "the fun atmosphere, the people, and the coaches." The team was so close, in fact, that they would often go out for breakfast after Saturday morning practices. This water polo team got along in and out of the pool.

When asked about the rituals performed before games, Eric Krolkiewicz, senior, said, "I stretch so I don't pull my hamstrings. Endurance was a necessity in this sport as well as flexibility. It's been said that playing a game of water polo is like sprinting two miles. Water polo is a demanding sport that requires a lot of strength, endurance, and flexibility. These skills are the sort needed to win wars and battles, even when they are not in the water." - John Bretl

No Horses No Sticks...

Everyone cheers as the Lady Dukes water polo team scores another goal. Many people who have never seen a match might think the game of water polo is "just a game," but those who play know it is much more than that. They know the hard work and dedication that goes into practices or matches.

A normal day started as early as 5:30 in the morning for a fun-filled hour and a half of swimming, "walking" (treading water), sprinting, and drills, sometimes swimming over 1000 yards. Mental challenges as well as physical challenges were a big part of the season. Courtney Monaghan, junior, elaborated by saying, "The hardest thing this year was facing the pressures of the game. If something went wrong you felt you were to blame."

Mr. David Rafferty-Flatter, head coach, set many goals going into the 2006 season. His main goal was to "get off to a good start early [and] do better in the first few games." Although they started off losing the first game they came back and had a streak of winning five games in a row, beating their biggest rivals, Oak Park River Forest. Rafferty-Flatters' goal was accomplished in the first half of the season and was followed up with an ending record of twenty-three wins and five losses.

Part of the reason they did so well during the season could have something to do with the fact that they were all so close as a team. They ended up more like sisters than teammates. Monaghan says, "We got to know each other as friends and players which in turn helped our game."

Band of Brothers

Seven boys got to run at the state cross country meet in Peoria; they won the state championship with a gap of 105 points. It was not only those seven young men that deserved to hold the 26th state title trophy, but all 184 contributing members of the team take credit for winning this year's trophy. It was easy to see that the boys cross country team put their heart into everything Mr. Newton told them to do.

Their training began before even some of us even woke up. Morning practice was optional, but a record turnout of over 90 boys said that the team was willing to do anything for their team, such as sacrificing an hour of sleep. "They go run to support their teammates," stated Coach Newton, but running those extra twenty miles a week really gave these boys the winning edge. They were 4-0 in duals; they won the Palatine Invite that included over thirty teams, and won the Peoria Invite with an all time low score of 20 points. Also, these boys were the only team in history to place seven runners in row at conference.

But with their success, came much hard work and dedication, running between 80 to 90 miles a week. These workouts were very intense, due to "Ale Marvis", and according to Coach Ware, "this is a program that Mr. Newton uses, and it's the same workouts that the Kenyans do." York was the only high school that trained in that manner. Timothy Jung, senior, explains how practices were: "They are very demanding. Some days are harder than others, but all are the key to success, they are the little things that help." -Christine Saenz

Course Wide Open

We have all seen them running up and down Spring Road and the Prairie Path, sometimes even before some of us have left the school. Most people do not realize how much running these girls actually fit into their daily schedules. At times, the commitment came close to being too much. Lauren Dalrymple, senior, said, "My nights were basically cross, food, sleep."

The girls started their typical practice with a meeting, then stretched, and then took a warm-up run to the prairie path. This was followed by strides to warm-up their legs, then the actual workout which consists of about 55 miles a week. Later, the girls cooled down, stretched, then exhausted, they would group together for a closing meeting. Of course, there were plenty of sore legs to be iced afterward.

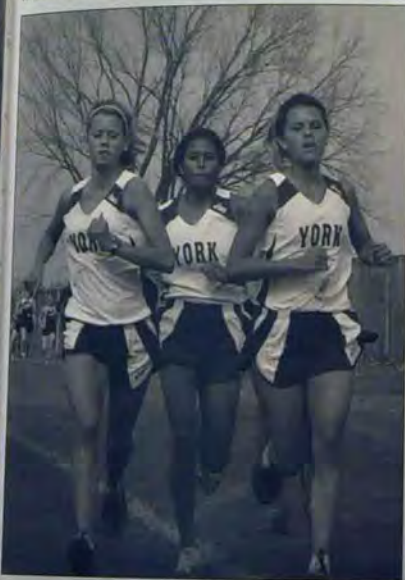

As the season progressed, so did the girls' aches and pains. That made it harder for the girls because that was when their performance was most crucial. Kairlin Profita, junior, said, "Injury was the biggest fear because you would have to stop training to heal while everyone else was still improving. You really didn't want to let your teammates down."

The girls constantly put pressure upon themselves to give it their all each week. Ms. Annette Schulte, coach, said, "I continually tried to convince the girls to give one hundred percent in practices one hundred percent of the time. I also tried to always deliver a solid conditioning and workout program."

The girls believed they had really improved from last season not only in the meets but in coming together as a team as well. Christine Caron, senior, said, "Everybody on the team this year was and still is best friends. I think that was why we were so improved. We were able to push each other in a positive way so that everyone always strived to do their best."

Although the girls had dealt with some crazy schedules, intense pressures, and not to mention all their aches and pains, they managed to break through all of that chaos and made the effort worth it. Profita said, "The pride and honor we felt when putting on those uniforms, and the bonds that kept us going, was what truly made it a season to remember." - Kelly Connolly

What's good about the Dukes' defense? "Everything," claims Ronald Celli, senior, which proved true throughout the season with their defensive sequence. Defense received mid-season praise for the best defense in the region.

"We play an aggressive, hard-nosed defense and love to blitz a lot," said Jordan Citrone, senior, after a game against rival Oak Park. The defense was able to hold opponents to an average of 5 points per game. York won the West Suburban Conference with a conference record of 6-0. "We plan on just keep winning and taking it one week at a time," said Scott Skuters, senior captain and linebacker, after the victory against Hinsdale Central.

With expectations exceeding last years, it took extra dedication in the players' chaotic lives. Weight room conditioning during the 9 month off season proved the importance of season goals. Daniel Brunke, senior, believed that the key components for a solid team were "speed and size." With the linemen averaging height of 6'3 and 250 lbs, no one wanted to mess with these Senior Captain and starting quarterback, Alexander Roth felt that "the offense has confidence in the defense and the defense in the offense" making football a close knit team. This camaraderie is hard to find in a sport containing eighty plus players. This helped the team down the road and lead them to a problem free season. This was carried throughout the off season as well.

Second year coach, Mr. Bill Lech turned these boys into men by coaching all the way through two consecutive Silver Conference Championships. "Monday is not a day off," was a common comment by Lech after a solid Friday night win. With a work ethic such as this, Lech takes his hat off to the seniors who are off to bigger and better things. - Elizabeth Hickey

White Tees & Polos...

Fore!

Early mornings, crazy teachers, and stress from studying are brushed off at 8th hour. The golf team takes a breath and heads to practice while pumping up to rap music. Joseph Widmar, senior, focuses with some Jim Morrison, "Golf is a lot of mental ups and downs. I get myself ready by listening to The Doors." No matter what, these guys are having a blast.

The boys respect each other as much as they respect the game. "We're amazing and respectable," says Widmar. Their love of competing took them to new heights, allowing them to win Regionals. "The team is awesome, everyone contributes something," said Jason Pankau, senior. The honest improvements have been anything but timid, "Everyone feeds into the team as a whole, makes them better and well unified." Says Mr. Jim Borel.

Practice, invites, tees and courses are overwhelming, but the golf boys harness any potential pressure into pure bliss. What makes them love golf so much? "Golf is different, the scenery and courses are always changing and you never make the same shot twice." Explains John Young, junior. This year the girls' golf team really "hit it off" not only did they greatly improve through the summer and the season, but they also had great chemistry together. When asked what she liked about golf Kara Flandoy, sophomore, said "Being with teammates- we always have a fun time golfing."

The season was not all fun; a lot of practicing went into it. The team practiced almost every day after school until 6 or 6:30, which consisted of hitting at the golfing range, putting, chipping, or practicing at their home course for nine holes.

Since golf took a lot of time, it was a lot of work for the team to keep up with homework and to improve their game at the same time. The team captain Jori Niemann, senior, put it best when she said "It's a very hectic season."

These girls put a lot of effort into the sport they love. They took time in the summer and a lot of time during the season to work on their skills. Many of them practiced almost every day in the summer. Trisha Goss, sophomore, said "I pretty much lived at the golf course."

The time and determination spent really paid off and made them a better team overall. Caitlin Regan, junior, said "Golf is a game where one can always improve their game."

Coaching a team is a big responsibility. It takes a lot of work and a lot of free time. The coaches, Ms. Barbara Tilden and Mr. Gary Walker, were a big help to the team. Lauren Van Denack, senior, said "We learn a lot from our coaches."

This year's golf season went well. The team got along and "hit it off" as friends. The team also literally "hit it off" when they showed their golfing skills. Kelly McDowell

Work Hard Play Hard

After that 3:11 p.m. bell rings for school to get out, the soccer boys put on their shin guards and cleats, and go to practice for almost three hours. The team goes out and runs some possession games, small games, and tactical games to help improve their skills as a player. Some expectations during practice are to give 100% everyday, to improve throughout the season, and to become a close group, not only as teammates but also as friends.

Boys varsity soccer coach, Mr. Markus Roy, said that their team goal was, "To improve on the season, win regionals, improve conference standings, and work together as a team on and off the field." Roy gave emphasis to the team about becoming very close this year because, "The closer we become as a team, the better we will play on the field," said Roy. Patrick Schwartz, senior, said, "What's hard as a team is to get everyone together through all the injuries everyone is having this season."

In addition to all the time spent practicing and competing, the boys had to learn to balance schoolwork, a social life, a family, and a job, Schwartz said, "You just have to identify your priorities and organize what is important." Although soccer was very time consuming, they still seemed to be able to handle all the chaotic disorder between all the other activities that went on in their lives.

The boys had about two soccer games during the week, which began at six and did not end till around 9:00 p.m. They also had plenty of Saturday games along with Saturday tournaments. Jordan Lomnicki and Randall Richter, seniors, lead the team as captains this year and according to Schwartz, "Jordan and Randy will go far this year because they have devoted a lot of time into this, and they have big spirits." Roy also says that, "All the seniors this year will do very well because they have been so focused throughout the season." - Courtney Monaghan

Dive In!

It's 5 am and while most students are still snoozing warmly in their beds, the seventy members of the girls' swim team are already diving into the icy chlorinated water at York's aquatic center. After swimming an intense workout, the girls have a short amount of time to prepare for the day. "It gets hectic in the mornings", said Brianna Tamm, senior, "We're all pretty crazy people to begin with and with the chaos of hurrying to get ready sometimes the locker room can be a complete madhouse."

There is no doubt about it, to be a member of this swim team, takes devotion and work. "We're dedicated. We swim around 2.5 miles a day with varying amounts of difficulty. We work hard at practice before and after school and put in long hours on the weekends. Most of the time our social lives are put on hold because swimming and school becomes our number one priority", said Nicole Cleveland, senior. The team boasted a successful season winning the Maine South Invitational and taking third in their regional. This year, the girls sent their 200 Free Style team lay down state which included Ellyce Redmond, junior, Lauren Irendreis, Rachel Parr, and Sophia Parr, senior.

Mr. Dave Davis makes sure that he keeps his girls on task. Each swimmer is required to make a priority but the girls still think it is a challenge to stay organized. "If you don't do it you won't understand why we get up at five am to practice and then do it again after school," said Karalena Guerrieri, senior, "People don't get why we practice up like smelling like the pool all day and how we can be swimming in circles and put so many other things in our life on hold. It's because deep down inside as a swimmer you couldn't imagine doing anything else." Dana Augustine

Rack up the Love

If you are in a sport, you already know there is a ton of pressure to do well. Girls' tennis is not any different. As a York tennis player stepped onto the court, she was bombarded with two hour practices, consisting of warm-up drills, practice matches, and match plays.

The different warm-up drills kept the girls ready to play this ten-week season sport. "As a ten-week sport, it pushed the girls harder as opposed to the ones who get to play year around," said Mr. Dave Williams. Not only was there pressure but there were challenges that came with it.

It was a goal for Mr. Dave Williams to try to win sectionals for the third year in a row. Also, getting third in conference and sending at least three players to state were all on Mr. Dave Williams' mind at the beginning of the season. "The players wanted to win sectionals, get to state, and defeat Hinsdale Central," said junior varsity player Amy Drabos, junior.

Bonding was a big part of the season and pasta parties were a huge part of that bonding. At the pasta parties, they served Italian food and the tennis team designed t-shirts at the end of the season. Hitting up Wendy's and Maggiano's after meets became a junior varsity tradition.

The underclassmen showed their strengths as players and were able to perform at a varsity level. This was, as Mr. Dave Williams said, "the main difference from last year." The seniors appeared on the junior varsity level as well.

With meets, conference, and sectionals, let alone practices, it was chaotic trying to keep up with homework and most importantly, a social life. Free periods such as study halls helped, but making time was a must. Getting home from practices around six did not leave much time for dinner and homework. Weekends allowed them to go out with friends unless there was a meet on Saturday.

The team found the best parts of being on the team in themselves. Even though tennis matches do not involve the whole team's participation such as football or basketball, everyone still knew each other really well. The team was close and the coaches made it fun.

As each player stepped onto the court, she knew what she had to do. Even though schedules were full, the players played as hard as they could. Drills, match plays, and practices are just the fundamentals of playing well and when that shows it makes winning more worthwhile. - Riya D'Silva

Meet Us on the Court!

The members of the team realized that to be competitively successful, it was necessary that they continue their team devotion even while not on the court. Not only did they devote much of their free time honing their skills, but they also came together and bonded as one unified team.

To pave the way for a successful season, many of the volleyball girls played on club teams during the off season and gave up the last two weeks of their summer vacation to commit to practices for the season. Once the season began, the girls faced long nights taken up by practices and games. At a typical practice, they warmed up, practiced blocking and footwork, "peppered" with a partner, ran defense and hitting drills, and scrimmaged. Also, for the first time this season, the girls spent time in the weight room lifting.

The time these girls spent paid off because the season ended with the team placing third in conference. This record was achieved by the competitive nature of team. Elizabeth Malone, junior said, "I love the feeling of success. I love putting up a decent set and having one of the hitters smash the ball down for a point."

While some teams at York have one or two rituals, these girls have a whole repertoire including "Call the Swat team", "Little Sally Walker", "pinkies", and pasta parties before each game. These activities helped make a close knit team and provided the players with good memories and lasting friendships. Amy Kosich, senior, said, "Playing volleyball has made my York High School experience more memorable than I could have ever imagined. Getting to know, and playing with, these girls has been outrageous. You can't get better than this."

He stands poised and ready at the free throw line. His feet are shoulder width apart, arms at the correct angle, tightly gripping the ball in his hands. His five senses go to work, taking in everything that surrounds him. He can hear the crowd, murmuring to themselves as they anticipate his shot, and he feels the beads of sweat running down his forehead, neck and back. His heart is beating so hard that it suddenly feels as if the bass drum from the marching band has somehow crept down his throat. Out of the corner of his eye he can see his coach pacing the sideline and his team waiting nervously for the shot, as this single point could win, or lose the game for them. He takes a deep breath and raises his head, his face rigid with concentration and determination. He shoots...

The boy's varsity basketball team had one thing on their mind this season: ICE—but not the kind used for injuries. The "ice" of the boys' basketball team meant something different. It stood for intensity, concentration and enthusiasm, and the team followed this philosophy throughout the entire season.

ICE influenced everything that the team did, whether it was running drills at practice or beating conference rival Hinsdale Central at Hinsdale Central, one of the more notable victories for the team. The captain of the team was Joe Acosta, senior, and each week, a different player stepped up and became a leader for the week. This system was developed by Mr. Al Biancalana, the coach of the team, to encourage leadership among the other team members.

The boys went 14-11 and the ICE philosophy contributed to every victory. The concentration aspect of ICE was one of the most essential parts to master, said Alex Roth, senior: "Once you're in the game, the only thing that matters is what's happening on the court. Other than that, nothing else is important." - Amanda Simo

Practicing at least four times a week, as well as playing several games a week, all the girls on the basketball team have been whipped into shape. While it may be tiring, the players speak highly of the practices, the coaches, and the team in general.

The practices were indeed difficult. Ken Dowdy, coach, said, "the practices are pretty intense. We've upped the intensity but the girls manage to infuse humor into the practices." An average practice consisted of running, drills, and much more.

Working as a team is very important to high achievement. Stefanie Matsas, sophomore, said, "Sometimes we work well as a team, other times we work as individuals but when we work as a team, we do really well." Communication on the court is a key factor to victory.

The girls get along outside of basketball as well as during the practices. Erin Kilgore, junior, said, "during basketball season, the team is like your second family. We become so close because we spend so much time together." When the team gets along, it is easier for the coaches to manage the players and for the girls to make baskets.

This year, the team was made up of many younger players. Rosa Andreuccetti, senior, said, "there are only two juniors and four seniors. The rest of the players are sophomores and freshmen." The girls motivated each other to do well and both the younger and older players took advice from one another.

The girls put a lot of time into their sport and really paid off. The team looks to continue to do well in years to come. - Catherine Byrne

May The Pins Fall

York, York, York, York...break it down now! Getting ready to perform your best at a bowling meet starts off with the perfect cheer. The girls' bowling team gets ready to bowl their best and beat the other team before every meet.

About forty people tried out for the team, and only 24 made the cut, which goes to show the competitiveness of bowling. The serious bowlers displayed some common skills. Mr. Dave Williams said that he looked for "a good score, 'coachability,' and that they were open to suggestions in order to improve."

Bowling is more than just whipping the ball down the alley. Kacey Bourdage, senior, said, "you need to be focused; it's a team sport, but it requires so much individual concentration." Consistency is also needed; one good score means nothing unless a player can consistently score well.

Williams said that bowling "can be frustrating because with every ball, there is a price." It's different from other sports because mistakes cannot always be fixed; there is pressure. But to beat the frustration they played games such as King of the Alley and made every practice fun.

The nature of sport required the team to gain a lot of patience. One day they could be off, and have a low score, and the next they could be right on, with a high scoring game. To add some fun to the team, while at the same time combat the frustration of an off day, the team made use of a hideous chicken doll. Bourdage said, "the person that bowls the lowest has to keep it until someone does worse—no one wants the chicken."

During a dual meet, there are six people and each bowls three games. Each level of bowlers, freshman, JV, and Varsity, had different goals they wanted to accomplish in each meet. The freshmen have an optional score because they were still learning, JV should reach scores of 135 and up, and Varsity should reach 145 and above.

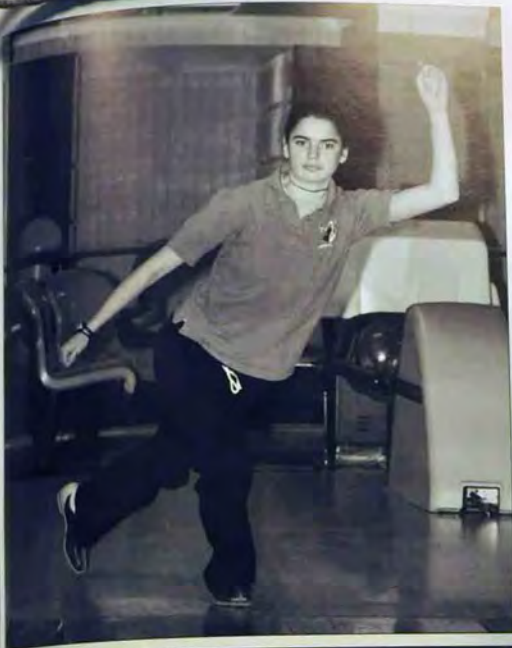

While bowling is a lot of hard work, the team had a lot of time to interact with each other. Marie Hansen, senior, said, "bowling is great because while about 24 girls are on the team, we practice together, and all of our meets are together, so no matter what grade you are, or how good you are, we're all learning from each other." - Sarah Menas

Gymnastics: a sport in which the slightest mistake can keep a gymnast from the first-place podium. In a sport where the goal is perfection and the pressure continues to grow, the girls' gymnastics team has kept up with the bar that continues to rise as the season passes and the next begins.

"This past season was a blast, but it was definitely a difficult one," said Kathleen McCall, junior, after the chaos of regionals and sectionals. The season was a time for many gymnasts to shine as the team went to regionals and three gymnasts advanced on to sectionals: Jordan Wilson, junior, Kael Leonard, sophomore, and Jacqueline Stefani, junior.

Gymnastics is all about work and determination in order to get the rewards. "Nothing feels better than nailing a skill you've been trying to get forever," said McCall. "It's the best feeling ever!" The girls practiced every day after school for three hours, working on moves to put in their routines for competition. "The reason gymnastics is my favorite sport is because you get such a sense of accomplishment," said Ashley Aguilera, sophomore. The girls worked hard not only to reach personal goals, but also to ensure that the team placed well in meets. "To be a gymnast you need to focus, stay disciplined and really motivate yourself and your teammates," said Stephanie Stevens, senior and captain. That determination and state of mind is what allowed the team to grow and excel.

You Autograph Everything You Do

Every team strives to be the best they can be. Setting goals, getting along, making friends—these are all things that teams do during the season to ensure that everyone does their best. When asked why the boys seem to get along so well, Andrew Matsas, junior, replied, “on the team, you feel so welcome. There is a diverse group of swimmers, but everyone comes together and just gets along.”

A normal day for the boys consisted of 6 a.m. practice, as well as afternoon practice. At morning practice the swimmers worked out in the weight room on the gymnastics balcony to strengthen their muscles. Then they headed to the pool for a quick swim and they were out of the pool by 7:15 a.m.. After school the boys had a half hour warm up followed by an intense two hours of swimming, then stretching, and finally a team meeting. The divers also had morning work outs, and after school practices were devoted to learning new dives and perfecting old ones. “The hardest thing of the season really is the morning practices. But, they’re all worth it in the end,” said Jordan Dickinson, senior.

The boys finished out the season strong. A few of the boys qualified for the state meet: Sean Freidheim and Eric Krolkiewicz, seniors, and Kent VanHorn and Benjamin Herrmann, juniors, qualified in the 200 Medley Relay; Krolkiewicz in the 500 Freestyle; and VanHorn in the 100 Backstroke. Pin Them Down!

A sport that requires brains, strength, intelligence, and dedication: wrestling. These boys don't mess around on the mat; they get down to business. Not only is this sport physically demanding but it is also mentally stressful: "No excuses and no one to blame. You have all the control and you determine your own success," said Michael Pearl, senior and captain. Sean Connell, junior also said, "Watching your weight takes everything you've got mentally."

These boys stayed two and a half hours everyday after school to practice and perfect their strategies for competing against the top teams in the state. "We start off with a warm up jog, then we drill some moves, then we wrestle live for short burst, and finally we wrestle live matches," said Mackenzie Tovey, senior and captain.

"The team chemistry was great," said Gary Walker, assistant coach. "All we expect is that the boys try their hardest." This year the team was able to persevere and qualified for the team sectional finals, which consisted of the top sixteen teams in the state. Senior Alex Oberlin said, "This year was a good year."

Three Cheers For

Cheerleading is more than just a sport, it is a way of life for these girls and nothing in the world will ever change that.

These

"A-T-T-A-C-K Dukes ATTACK!" Everyone hears their cheers at football games, basketball games, and competitions, but nobody really knows what the York Cheerleaders are all about. They take time out of their hectic schedules to come to each and every football and basketball game, and get the crowd pumped. These girls wake up at five in the morning on the weekends to compete against other high schools. Nobody truly knows the hard work and dedication that the cheerleaders put in on a daily basis.

Each practice was full of different workouts and training to keep the girls in top form for games and competitions. They started out with stretching and jumps, and then took some time to perfect their tumbling and stunts for performances. They also worked on things such as dancing, cheering, and sideline routines. Depending on what part of the season it was, different emphasis was put on different areas of practice. That is one thing that many do not know about cheerleading, it is not just one season worth of work. This sport counts as an entire year's worth of athletics, beginning in the fall with football, then continuing to basketball in the winter, and finishing with spring competitions.

The season this year got off to a shaky start with twelve different injuries, including a torn ACL and multiple pulled and strained muscles. Emily Bowman, junior, said, "Cheerleading challenges you mentally, emotionally, and physically. Every day brings a new challenge, but in the end it produces a great reward." The girls pulled it all together though to have a great season. They may not have made it to state this year but Amanda Simo, junior, said, "Next year we will be going to state whether I have a say in it or not!"

With a ten month long season, practice three hours a day, competitions, and routines to choreograph there are many ways to describe the York Poms. As coach Ms. Sara Kush put it, her team is resilient, good in pressure situations, and dedicated. "During such a long season they have to weather a lot of storms, deal with the many ups and downs, and handle unexpected situations that occur," Kush added. Many of these situations brought the girls closer. Edie Carney, senior, said, "we have all been through a lot on this team and yet we still have one of the strongest bonds out of all York teams." Throughout all of their experiences each team member has had to learn to persevere and stay strong.

During the season the poms practiced three hours a day. Unlike many other teams they are responsible for choreographing their own routines and then critiquing them in order to improve. For competitions, generally the captains came up with the routines along with help from the fellow seniors. All the dedication they had to put forth to become successful to the end allowed them to perform better as a team. Not only did they spend time together coming up with routines, but they also had team bonding before games. "We have potluck before games to bond as a team. It's nice to get to know each other in a more relaxed environment and the fun we have ultimately comes out in our performance," captain Raquel Montgomery, senior, said.

All of their preparation and bonding as a team proved to be a positive experience for the York Poms. Last year the team made it to state for the very first time. Ms. Kush described the experience as, "surreal, exhilarating, filled with energy and a good experience." The girls qualified for both pom and kick against fourteen other teams. This year, however, they were "determined to go even farther in competition season," Montgomery said. - Erin Kilgore

Going Down. in History

"Soccer is such a rush, the whole team gets really fired up," Gary Howell, junior. The boys went to regionals where they dominated and were regional champs. They finished the season with a record of 12-10.

"We all have confidence in each other because we are a close knit team. The offense has confidence in the defense and the defense in the offense," Alexander-Roth, senior. This year the football team won conference. They won three playoff games and made it to the state semifinals with a final record of 11-2.

"Making it to sectionals and state the past two years has been an amazing experience. It feels like such a great accomplishment to make it so far," Kelly Barry, sophomore. Girls' Tennis was determined and placed second in sectionals. Kelly Barry placed third all state.

"It was rewarding to put in so much hard work and have it pay off in such a positive way," Michael Fry, senior. Boys' Cross Country went undefeated, winning conference, regionals, sectionals and York's 26th state title.

"I enjoy golf because of the very laid-back, no pressure element and it just gets better as you keep practicing," Jason Pankau, senior. This year Boys' Golf won regionals and placed eighth at sectionals. Jason Pankau qualified for state.

From cars to law, clubs at York cover a wide variety of interests. We wake up that extra half hour early and stay past three eleven to make it to meetings. Clubs reflect students' interests, personalities, and beliefs. These clubs help us expand our horizons, and make new friends with shared interests. Throwing extra activities into already-crazy schedules adds one more thing to juggle and one more thing to make high school complete.

Fight for the right

These members not only fight for student rights, but for the rights of those who need it most.

Envision a world in which every person enjoys every human right endowed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. As the years go by Amnesty International grows by the thousands, and the vision becomes clearer. The main focus of the group is to take action on preventing and ending abuse, advocating freedom of conscience and expression, and of course the promotion of human rights.

Every Thursday afternoon, members of York's Amnesty International met to plan and prepare events and benefits. The events ranged from educational movies, to benefit concerts. Amnesty showcased the film The GroundTruth and had an exceptional turnout of students. The annual benefit concert's theme was fighting against torture. All of the earnings were divided among different charities, including a charity to end the situation in Darfur.

Educating the population of York about human rights violations was a difficult task to take on. Choosing to become a member of Amnesty required more than just free time; it required vast dedication but that dedication paid off. "The knowledge that you, one person out of the entire world, can have an effect on another individual's life is what makes Amnesty a rewarding experience," said senior Madeline Brodt. - Lillian Johnson

Check mate

Six years ago a group of students walked into Ms. Leslie Stipe's math classroom and told her they wanted to form a chess club. "They needed an advisor for the club, so they asked me if I would do it. I honestly didn't know how to play chess at all," said Stipe. Two years later the chess club members decided they wanted to compete in matches and tournaments. This changed the chess club to the chess team and gave them recognition under the IHSA.

Eleven teams make up the conference in which the York chess team competes. This year the team even went to state to compete. "I had to take them to the state competition in Peoria for two days, and they just make me laugh. They're funny, smart, and very intense when they play," Ms. Stipe noted.

Byron Chen, freshman, tied for first place in the team tournament and won first place for individual in the state meet. Additionally, Joseph Klenck, junior, received the sportsmanship award and most improved player went to sophomore Paul Kulander. During last year's State meet, York was ranked 114th out of 120 teams, and this year, the team was ranked 38th out of 120 teams, which was quite an improvement.

The York chess team met every Tuesday and Thursday in Stipe's classroom. Team members games against each other, practice and show off their winning moves. Assistant Principal, Mr. David Creech even comes in occasionally to play with the team. Stipe was clearly proud of the team, saying, "I'm most impressed with their analytical skills and their great ability to think so far in advance." -Tracie Widmaier

Any student, regardless of race, gender, ethnicity or GPA, deserves the opportunity to feel involved in their school and have the chance to participate in all activities offered to the school. That is what this group was all about. Circle of Friends met once a week. Sponsored by Mr. Drew Bendelow and Ms. Marie Thielhouse, this outstanding group of students juggled homework, friends, work, and social lives just to make room for what they do at these meetings. One event enjoyed throughout the organization was their Halloween celebration. "We all dressed up in our costumes and took everyone trick-or-treating around the block. We all had so much fun," said Bendelow.

The goal of Circle of Friends was to make everyone who is interested feel involved in school and let them know they have a place. When asked about what was most memorable about Circle of Friends, Caity Collins, senior, said "Many of the kids we do activities with provide you with more fun than you could possibly imagine."

The hardest thing about Circle of Friends was "making sure every student gets involved in all of the activities and no one is left behind. On the other hand, however, the best part is having the chance to interact with people that you normally would not," says Anne Bendelow, sophomore.

People joined Circle of Friends for new opportunities, new friends and a new outlook on life. Therese Dunne, sophomore, said "While it may not be a typical club, its very fun."

These students take time out of their day to brighten the lives of some of the "sweetest kids that go to York High School," as said by Therese Dunne, sophomore. While at times challenging, the rewards are always worth the work.

A paper at a time

The gentle hiss of Kelley Chertowson, Rachel Kelly, and Erin Dunne, sighs of relief, only for the thought of saving the world (and recycling) has not yet faded.

Imagine going on rock climbing field trips, canoeing in the fall, and snorkeling all for a school club. This may sound unreal, but Ecology Club achieves all these events and more during a year.

When looking for activities that are fun and help the environment at the same time, look no farther than Eco club. Mr. Bob Blaue, the club's coordinator does not create this club and its activities by himself but has help from a very involved individual.

"Everyone gives all their possible participation in this club; however, Mary O'Malley, senior, seems to be one of the most hard core members," said Blaue.

Not only do these one hundred plus students enjoy themselves, but they also help the environment at the same time. At the beginning of the year, Eco club's usual recycling project gathered a whopping 1.6 tons of paper. "That number was nothing; we usually gather much more than that, which is about 3 tons," said Blaue. The recycling job occurs once a week, and the paper is gathered during the lunch periods. Recycling at school is not only a way to get students into the habit of recycling, but it also helps get the message out that recycling is good for the environment.

Besides field trips, recycling, and earth day assemblies, the members dressed up as Santa's helpers on the Polar Express where families ride on a train to see Santa. Mary O'Malley, senior said, "I love to see the kids' reactions to everything we do on the train ride. We hand out hot chocolate and then read The Polar Express to all the kids and their families on the train."

The general message of this club is to learn about the earth and how to make it better because every action makes a difference. Therefore, Eco club promoted that message to the school community. - Monica Arcaro

Rise

No doubt, law team has done it again. Their performance over the last few years has been excellent. This year, their hard work and determination led them to another great season. But what exactly did it take to achieve these accomplishments? Practice, practice, and more practice.

The season starts off in October by choosing the team and going over the rules for the mock trial. The roles of opening and closing statements, direct examination, cross examination, witness, and attorney are all distributed. The case comes out in November. This year, the case was about two college students who plagiarized. Until March, the team practiced three times a week. At Saturday practices, a real attorney came in to watch and gave feedback. They gave their input on what should be changed and what work needed to be done at home. The team put in a lot of effort which was essential to being perfect for trial. Margaret Regan, junior, said, "by the end of the season, you are reciting your lines in your sleep." During a trial, real attorneys and judges scored each team member on a scale of one to five. At the end, they were given their scores as well as an evaluation of their performance which they used to improve for the future. By March, the team has thoroughly researched, rehearsed, and memorized in hope of winning State. Patrick Kuehnle, senior, said "in the end, it all comes down to your performance mostly, then content".

Even though the team lost a lot of seniors this year, they were still able to come together and perform a great season. Ms. Laura Olson, coach, said, "everyone was very serious minded and we spent a lot more time on the case." The team placed second out of sixteen at the St. Charles East Tournament. They also placed second out of twenty four at the Dupage County Tournament. Finally, the team ranked ninth out of fifty schools at State in Springfield. These were all great accomplishments. Overall, it was a successful team and year. - Kelly Connolly

Hard work is what often comes to mind when one thinks about Model UN. Lead by Ms. Michele Carlson, the members of this club met weekly and had to do research on various topics they discussed at conferences.

Word of mouth is how many of the members of Model UN came to be in the club. Kayla Chen, junior, explained, "One of my teachers encouraged me to go to a meeting and it turned out to be something my friends and I became interested in." Other members joined because of interest in global affairs or in other cultures.

At the weekly meetings Model UN discussed ways to raise money in order to help pay for their trips to conferences. Also, countries were assigned for the upcoming conferences.

What The World Needs Now

There were various locations for conferences this year, including the yearly trip to Canada. At the conferences everyone was broken up into groups and each group had a global issue that they needed to resolve. When talking about one time when she and other delegates were in agreement over an issue, Erin Dunne, senior, said, "It was so awesome. It was great to get involved and see others doing the same."

Besides the usual student load of school work and having a social life, members of Model UN devoted a lot of time to this club. Despite all of the hard work, the members of Model UN had a great time. They learned about all the conflicts in the world and they made new friends from all over. -Kelly McDowell

About Commitment

National Honor Society represents the group of York students with commitment to all areas: academics, community service, school involvement, and leadership.

National Honor Society, NHS, honored the seniors who were at the top of their class, not just in grades, but also in personality. Each member is well-rounded. To sum up NHS, Deana Pezza, senior, said, "NHS is all about commitment: commitment to education, commitment to leadership, commitment to York, and commitment to the community."

A student who was accepted into NHS had to be at the top before even joining the society. According to President Patrick Kuehnle, senior, in order to be a member of NHS a student "must have a grade point average of a 3.5 or higher, participate in community service, be in leadership roles, and have school involvement."

Once in NHS, they needed to maintain their grades and maybe even add to their normal amount of service hours. Every member had to complete sixteen hours of community service during the year.

NHS ran a drive for school supplies which members helped at, but many also volunteered at the hospital, passed out treats at a tree lighting ceremony, set up crafts and activities at The Hub's Haunted House, read to children on the Polar Express, and much more. Members had to follow through and make all of the NHS meetings; if they missed one, they had to add another hour of community service to their original sixteen.

NHS may sound like it was all work and no play, but it greatly benefited those involved. NHS gave about 150 student members an "outlet to give back to the community." Luke Kahovec, senior, said Kuehnle agreed that NHS benefited the members because it gave them recognition and helped with college applications. The commitment the members had to begin with, helped them through NHS and helped their future for college admissions. - Kristina Albarello

When A Problem Comes along

A club that involves intellectual knowledge and dedication. A club that helps students improve and expand their brains. There isn't just one club at York that challenges students, there are two: Math Team and Scholastic Bowl. Scholastic Bowl demands quick thinking and cat-like reflexes as well as confidence from each member responsible for their specific area of expertise.

The Math Team had fun doing what many students dread: math ranging from all areas-algebra to calculus. Math Team member Catherine Byrne, senior said "working with this team is great, we work hard every day."

Both organizations require members who are dedicated and combine the love of challenges with the desire to learn more and compete. Luke Kahovec, senior and Scholastic Bowl member said, "though it's hard, we do have fun. I love pressing the buzzers you press to say your answers at competition."

The organizations are a place where the members gathered and learned from the competition and from the people who instructed them. Scott Baier, senior, said, "Mr. Schoenberg is a really great guy. He's one of the reasons I love being on Math Team so much!"

Time to help

"Volunteer service must be encouraged in our young people so they will continue to volunteer throughout their lives"

- Ms. Val Stewart

Want to be the next Angelina Jolie and help the world? How about starting right here in the community and working up? Key club members get to experience the feeling of accomplishment from reaching out and helping the community through service.

It all started in 2005 when four students wanted to bring Key club, an international service club, to York High School. The first project was raising money to buy a sports wheelchair for a fellow student. Key club members extend a helping hand to the community.

Members want to volunteer and do whatever they can to help. This is why Key club is such a respectable club. It grew in popularity and attracted more students. Each year around twenty more students joined. Key club grew to at least one hundred people.

Ms. Val Stewart, advisor and member of Kiwanis Club, the organization's sponsor, wants Key club members to be proud of their accomplishments. "I want them to appreciate the value of community service on a personal and community level," said Stewart.

Volunteering is a vital part of the community and Key club fulfills the duty of those who do not part take in it. "Volunteer service must be encouraged in our young people so they will continue to volunteer throughout their lives," said Stewart.

Members had many choices of service projects. They helped the Kiwanis Club with their Peanut and Pancake Day, Ticked Pink, and Special Kids Day.

There were service projects that helped with senior citizens as well. At the Senior Citizen Chore Days the members went to senior citizens' homes and helped with the yard work that they were unable to do. They also taught a computer class to the senior citizens, which they held here at school.

The members were proud of their services, which other students who do not participate in community service may not be able to relate to. "They are given the opportunities to provide service, build their character and develop leadership skills. Once given these opportunities, they learn to continue to develop and serve others in a variety of ways," said President Caitlin Collins, senior. - Sarah Menas

Pride: To be Drug...

Positive
Role Models
Indicating the Direction to Excellence

In this day and age, where drugs and alcohol litter our daily lives with temptation, this small group of students takes a stand. They are the members of the as-of-yet rarely heard about club called "PRIDE": Positive Role Models Indicating the Direction to Excellence.

The club had many activities throughout the year to promote the club. Sponsor Mrs. Peggy Babiar sent the members a friendly weekly e-mail reminding them of the meeting time and location as well as any other information, like what they might need to bring. Member Shannon Rohm, sophomore, said that "my favorite thing was when we signed the pledge to stay drug free, it was powerful."

They worked concessions at basketball games, made cards for soldiers in Iraq and for the elderly at Christmas time, and they wrote letters to their role models on Valentines Day. These were students who tried to do a variety of things to keep the school involved and to help one another stay on the right path. Sarah Menas, sophomore, described a typical meeting as a "nice escape from the everyday temptations of high school".

Win or Walk Home

She looks a little nervous for Charlotte Fulleton, senior, as she gets ready to perform her piece for a crowd of people. Charlotte only has a few minutes of time to finish preparing before she will be judged on her skill. Photo courtesy of Charlotte Fulleton

For people of all ages, the thought of public speaking can be one of the scariest imaginable. Not for the students of the speech team, however. These people love to speak in front of an audience. In fact, they love it so much that they were willing to get up at five o'clock a.m. every Saturday morning in order to participate in competitions.

Being on speech team required commitment from the students. "Each student attends a whole group meeting once a week, as well as a meeting with his or her individual coach. The students also attend the six o'clock a.m. to six o'clock p.m. meets once a week," said Ms. Dawn Forde, speech team advisor.

Some may wonder what being on speech team actually involved. "There are many different events—dramatic, traditional, persuasive events, etc. Everyone has an event," said Charlotte Fulleton, senior. The students on the team had to know how to think on their feet, dictate their words, and memorize well.

The students of the team spoke highly of one another and of the team in general. "We all become so close that no matter how anyone does in the competition, we are all there to support one another," said Margaret Deady, senior. Speaking in public can be high-pressure, but the members of the team did their best to show their care for everyone.

The kids really do enjoy what they do on the team. "It's probably the only thing I would wake up at 5:30 a.m. for every Saturday," said Amanda Perez, senior. Speech team provided the students with an activity to enjoy, as well as practice for a possible career in the future. Catherine Byrne academy

There are math and science and English, but to balance the basics we also have music, Med Careers, Invite, Honorary Societies, VICA/DECA, FCCLA, etc. As if managing regular classes was not enough, we take on these additional classes. They serve as a break from the academic pressure and are the best part of the daily academic schedules for us. Academics build on our interests, providing direction through the madness.

They Don't Skip A Beat

It really is not possible to imagine pep rallies, football games, or any of the sports, without the York band. Name one person who does not go crazy in the bleachers when they start up the traditional "fight song." Their momentum, spirit, and craze drives everyone wild. It truly would not be the same without them.

We all get to see the finished product of the band but who knows what really goes on behind the scenes? To begin with, these students put in at least eight hours a week between the school practices and required rehearsing at home. They had to; it was a constant pressure to maintain the band's high standards. Aside from keeping up with the new material, they were always rehearsing their yearly solo. Not to mention they had three concerts a year and an audition after each one. Tom Lampo, senior, said, "All I can say is practice, practice, practice. That's really all it comes down to."

A major change created last year was the start of the "Pride Factor." The pride factor was created to make sure every band member was continually representing the school in a mature way. Nina Gortowski, junior, said "Mr. P always says to remember that people are watching us even when we think they're not. It's always really important to be mature in everything we do." When asked if he saw a change in the band from last year to this year, Guillermo Contreras, senior, said "I think people are way more into the pride idea. You can really see what an impact it has made."

Every year is the start of a new band. Mr. Polancich, director, said "There is different student leadership, strengths, and weaknesses. One year there may be a strong percussion section and a weaker woodwind section. Although, next year may have brass section as the strength and leadership." The cycle is always changing but you can still count on one thing, the York band will never skip a beat. - Kelly Connolly

Singing loud and proud

A soft sound floats through the vacant hallways during 6th hour. Students sitting in hectic classes pause in their work and listen to the beautiful music drifting into their classroom. What is this impromptu concert? It's the sound of the choir practicing in the acoustically friendly atrium stairwell.

Concert Choir, Cader Choir, and Choraliers rehearsed as classes everyday. Class began each day with warm-ups, where the choir students did vocal exercises and scales to bring their voices to full range. After this, they spent the rest of class working on different pieces. Some popular ones among the Concert Choir were Handel's Messiah and Ave Maria. Learning new pieces proved to be challenging. Amy Davelis, junior, said "One of the biggest challenges to learning new pieces is just becoming comfortable with the music, and your specific parts." They spent their classes preparing pieces for the three concerts. In addition to preparing for concerts at York, they also prepared their pieces to perform for other events.

There were also many opportunities outside of class for choir members. Throughout the year, members of all levels of choir were invited to try out for various solos. The Concert Choir went on a field trip to Whitney Young High School in Chicago for a choir presentation. On this overnight trip, the choir went out for a nice dinner, saw another choir perform, and stayed at a hotel downtown. Also, there were other choirs for which members could audition. Madrigals was an extra curricular choir which consisted of nineteen members that were selected by a highly competitive audition. Yet another opportunity for the students outside of the classroom was the IMEA All State Choir in which some members sang.

"Everyone in choir gets along so well, we're like one big family," said Kathleen McCall, junior. The choir family does many other things outside of class besides singing. This winter, they adopted a family around the holidays. The choirs donated money, shopped for toys, clothes, and other gifts, and delivered them to a needy mother. The choirs also had the option of going to see musicals downtown.

Members enjoyed being in choir because, like Margaret Callahan, junior, said, "It's not just like another class where you're sitting at a desk and staring at a whiteboard, you're actually up and doing something so it's fun." This class with its many opportunities and family atmosphere served as a break among schedules filled with many other hectic classes, not just for those in choir, but for all who experienced their wonderful talents. -Lillian Johnson and Sinead Flood

building Skills for life

There are over ninety Family, Career, and Community Leaders of America at York. Can you believe it? FOCIA is a nationwide organization represented in all fifty states, making it the second largest student organization. Preparing students for the future is the focus of this academic group.

Current and previously enrolled Family & Consumer Science students could join FOCIA. Becoming a part of this organization allowed students to further develop specific skills in a variety of interests. Students prepared for a variety of different competitions that took place towards the end of the year. Each category of interest, known as a chapter, competed in different types of competitions. Students of all grade levels worked together in order to become successful in their field of interest.

The Iron Chef cook-off, which tested members on speed and quality of food preparation was the central competition of the cooking chapter. Students who enjoyed the field of interior design focused on other competitions, including room set-ups. These intense competitions were the only extra practice for those students getting ready for State. Illinois is highly competitive in all chapters, but there is nothing more competitive than State in the spring.

"We come up with a design plan and then execute it," exclaimed Stacy Knighton, junior. She took first place in the state for the doubles interior design competition with a creative Victorian-style house. "I think it was such good experience because you're judged by professionals and have to be able to present your work well," stated Anna Gilmartin, junior. State was the event of the year for those in the competition. These students truly paved the way for a successful future. - Elizabeth Hickey

You're Invited

Invite to Teach is a program in which juniors and seniors go to other schools in the district to assist teachers and experience what it is like to teach. These students drive to their teaching schools at the end of 6th period and stay through eighth.

The soon-to-be teachers were a little apprehensive on their first days in front of the students. Alyssa Kramer, senior, said, "The first day I was very nervous. My hands were shaking and I could hardly get my words out."

Once they got over their fears, they had other challenges to deal with: getting their lessons across to the students and disciplining the students when they misbehaved. This was also a tough class to take because they had to worry about their students' work and they also had their own high school grades to worry about.

These aspiring teachers had a lot of work to do. Their tasks included helping some of the students who had trouble with school work, grading papers, and entering grades into computers. They also had the responsibility of planning a lesson and teaching it.

This experience was not all work and no fun. For those who taught gym, there was a lot of playing games and interaction, and the others got to play games and interact with the students in class. Overall, they had a fun time.

They must have enjoyed what they learned in the program because many of the Invite to Teach students decided to pursue careers in teaching. Christine Duprey, senior, said "I took Invite to Teach because I want to be a teacher and I wanted to try it out first. It helped me decide that I do want to be a teacher."

This class prepared these juniors and seniors for the future. As Noel Williams, senior, said "All the things I'm learning in this class will help me in the future with student teaching and being an actual teacher." So although these aspiring teachers started out nervous and uncomfortable, they overcame their fears and enjoyed their time teaching. -Kelly McDowell

the Real world

The real world is not an easy place to be. It is not MTV, and it is not like most of the movies ever made. In fact, most people don't even know what the real world is until they leave school. Luckily for the select few students of Med-Careers, they get to step out of the beige and green hallways of York, and into the overcrowded corridors of Elmhurst Memorial Hospital to learn first hand about what's really out there.

In order to work at the hospital students first needed to learn the skills and procedures. First semester of Med-Careers was dedicated to learning the basics. The future Doctors of America trained with stethoscopes, took each others blood pressure, and did dissections. "Dissections are really cool because it's not something you get to do in an every day class," said Rebecca Harding, senior. Med-Careers was definitely not an everyday class, especially considering that on top of all that they already do, they got to go to the Cadaver Lab. There, students got to look at and feel the different body parts. Back at the hospital, students picked 8 out of 28 different medical rotations in which they were interested. Some fields included the emergency room (a popular choice), birthing center, physical therapy, and cardiology. Med-Careers was a very hands-on class, and students could draw blood and take blood pressure. Another place students could go was DeVries Animal Hospital, where they could work with animals, if that was their desired future occupation.

Most importantly, however, was what Med-Career taught, other than medicine. It taught students about real life. "Learning comes from life's experiences," said Med-Careers creator and teacher, Ms. Catie Feigh. "I can teach them in a classroom—but they learn from life." —Victoria Messina

Practice makes perfect

Orchestra is a group of musicians that play not only string instruments, but also clarinets, flutes, cornets, and many others. Mr. Ray Oswald, director of orchestra, said, "I enjoy passing on the musical knowledge and experience I remember enjoying as a student myself." He also said that he hoped his students learned about life through their music they performed.

This year the orchestra played challenging pieces of music, and the sound was a lot fuller because all of the new members joined. Oswald also said that they strive for perfection, and although they do not always get there, it gets them to the highest level they can reach.

Each year the orchestra performs four major concerts, and all three levels of orchestra have the opportunity to travel to Illinois State University and University of Illinois. This provides them with the chance to learn from college conductors and musicians. The orchestra goes on trips and events and plays concerts, but they never compete. Each musician has his or her own personal goal to achieve, but as an orchestra, they do not go to competitions. However, there were individual competitions in which they could compete. "Our practices are a combination of hard work, fun, creativity, cooperation, and team work," Oswald said. When he talked about his job he said, "I have the greatest job in the world, we're all doing something we love to enjoy."

All the People Behind the Scenes

When York thinks about the school dances and school planned events one probably do not think about the people behind the scenes, the people who make it all possible. Students are just focused on having a good time with friends, but in reality there are people behind those events and they are members of the York Student Council.

StuCo, as they are frequently called, met every day during week except on Wednesdays during 5th period. Every meeting was packed full of planning for different events. This included picking themes for dances, organizing decorations, and organizing fund raisers and other school-sponsored events. All of this planning can be very stressful. Mike McHugh, junior, said, "The planning and execution of these events is stressful, but when it is all over the final product makes it all worth it."

While seniors planned Senior

Soirée the juniors worked on Prom, the sophomores planned Turnabout, and freshmen worked on flyers and getting the word out. Even after all of the planning was done for one event, there was always one coming up that needed to be organized, so the work never stopped. Setting up for events was the hardest part and as Jessica Rodriguez, sophomore, said, "Setting up is difficult, but we all work together and manage to get it all done, and it looks pretty good too!"

So next time students walk into the commons for a school event, maybe they will think about all of the planning and hard work that went into making everything look good, maybe they will think of those people who sacrificed their time to make sure everyone else had a good time. StuCo may put the "stud" in student council, but they also put work into a good time. - Nina Gortowski

A Skills/USA & DECA Bonanza

Skills/USA and DECA are two programs for students interested in industrial technology or marketing. The students of these organizations enjoy spending time learning about different aspects of marketing or industrial technology.

DECA stands for Distributive Education Clubs of America. The program is for any student enrolled in a marketing class. The students in DECA compete in college-level tests and competitions. In these competitions they are sometimes given scenarios and are then required to think on their feet and come up with a solution. This made the competitions fast paced. DECA advisor Mr. Jim Borel said, "DECA teaches students marketing and sales." DECA students met every day in class to practice and learn.

Paige Elliott, senior, said she joined DECA to "further my interest in business and marketing, because I would like to pursue a career in those areas." Another student, Sonya Fedele, senior, said she joined to "learn more about the business world." For whatever reason they joined, the students involved in DECA had a good time. Elliott thought DECA was fun because of "our group. Many different personalities put together [makes] for a lot of fun."

Skills/USA is an industrial technology program for students at York. To join, one must be in an industrial technology class. Skills/USA usually met on Thursday mornings before school. Advisor Mr. Ken Ross said, Skills/USA "teaches students responsibility, work ethic, craftsmanship, and how to volunteer." Students in Skills/USA get the chance to compete in competitions where they participate in projects similar to those they have in class.

The students in Skills/USA enjoyed it. Boping Liu, senior, joined Skills/USA because, "Mr. Ross is the man." Other students joined because of their interests in their industrial technology classes. Daniel Berg, senior, would suggest Skills/USA to students because he said, "It's fun, you get to meet people you may never even think about meeting and it looks good on your resume."

The students of Skills/USA and DECA had a great time in their programs and also learned a great deal from Mr. Ross and Mr. Borel. They got the chance to compete in difficult, yet rewarding competitions and also meet new people. -Shannon Roha hot off the press:york-hi

When the Yorkhi newspaper rolls off the press, the student body reads informative, entertaining, and thought-provoking articles by their peers; but what they cannot see is the less glamorous side of Yorkhi, the hard work involved in producing a newspaper from scratch.

The first step towards creating the sixteen page paper was for the staff to brainstorm ideas they believed would attract the attention and interest of the students. One of the staff's most important tasks was to generate ideas for editorials because they pertain to issues affecting the student body at large. Mr. Andrew Bouque said, "Our greatest challenge is being a strong newspaper editorially."

After the staff brainstormed ideas, the section editors met with the two Co-Editors Ashley Allen and Ritika Singh, seniors, and chose the article and editorial ideas for the current issue. It was the responsibility of the section editors to then decide which stories would appear in their section, and Allen and Singh assigned articles to the staff based on their talents and their ability to aptly cover the assigned issue.

Once assignments were made, individual staff members researched each story and produced copy for editors to proof. Articles appearing in the paper were read at least three times twice by copy editors and finally by Bouque.

During deadline, the staff stayed after school until about nine o'clock. The page editors designed their assigned pages. This included not only deciding where the articles would be placed, but also making space for pictures, graphics, and cartoons. At this time, artists and photographers turned in their work. According to Singh, it was the job of photographers to "capture the essence" of their assigned topic. As for artists, they had to read the article for which they were providing artwork and convey the writer's message through their artistic interpretation.

Once finished, the paper is sent to the printer where it was usually turned out within twenty-four hours. Meghan Dolan, senior and photographer said, "It's hard to describe how it feels to see your work in a publication; I guess I'd say it feels pretty good."

The staff of Yorkhi was a staff which embodied diverse interests and talents-whether it be writing, design, artwork, or photography; all of these individuals made it a complete paper. Singh said, "The wide range of talents of the staff culminated in each edition of the paper and made it what it is."

You Create the Madness

Think about a time when you have felt an extreme amount of pressure. What words come to mind when thinking of these times: frantic, stressed? These are feelings that yearbook staff members know all too well, especially during deadline time. As Courtney Grob, junior and photo editor put it, "There is a lot of pressure during deadlines because everything is so chaotic." A lot of time and energy was devoted to managing the chaos.

Thirty students made up the 2006-2007 yearbook staff. Each member had the responsibility of producing at least two spreads to go in the yearbook. This proved to be a challenging task at times, "Sometimes it is overwhelming because I have to worry about my own spread and other people who have questions and problems," said Margaret Kenny, managing editor and junior. All staff members had to conduct interviews with students, coaches, and sponsors of the club or team about which they were writing, as well as take pictures. Although all of this added to the stress the staff felt, it also bettered the quality of the book.

During deadlines, "the stress level goes up," said yearbook advisor, Ms. Isadora Parrini. Everyone rushed around the computer lab putting finishing touches and last-minute details on their spreads to perfect them. The chaos really showed through during these times as staff members fought for the limited number of computers to finalize their work. Although at times it seemed that the deadlines were unreachable, everyone pulled together in helping with the creation of the book.

There is no question that the pressure of putting together a book of memories and experiences an entire student body will see is a lot to handle. It took dedication, drive, and in many cases long hours outside of class time and sometimes on weekends to complete the yearbook. That is what creating the yearbook entails; it is something that each staff member is willing to accept, and ultimately they understand the chaos. -Erin Kilgore

Wherever we turn in high school, there's someone there. Between the teacher that inspires us in the most boring subject and the friends with whom we make unforgettable memories, it's people who provide the madness with a combination of drama and comic relief. The high school experience wouldn't be the same without them.

"I want to be in the 20s so I could chill with Al Capone."
- Alexander Messina, sophomore

"The 80s because they had big hair and shiny clothes and
'girls just want to have fun!'"

What would be your dream car?

"My dream car would be Santa's sleigh because you get to travel by reindeer. Plus you get cookies and hot chocolate." - Grace Nelson, sophomore

"My dream car would be the Oscar Meyer Weiner mobile. I would rename it to the Pimp Mobile, foshizzle. Do you need a different drivers license for that?" - Kara Sajeske, sophomore

"It would be a Volkswagen hippie van that has bean bag chairs as the seats. It would also have a TV in the trunk with a PS3 and a disco ball. Plus it would have a golf tee on the roof with a pop-up water bed." - Steven Tebbe, sophomore

"The mystery machine because what would be cooler than solving mysteries with Scooby Doo?" - Michael Moen, sophomore

What TV family resembles yours the most?

"Everybody Loves Raymond because they are competitive, and there is a loving atmosphere. Also, I have a brother named Ray."
- Ariel Yong, sophomore

"That 70s Show because there are always hot babes hanging in our basement." - Patrick Hamill, sophomore, pictured with Kelley Chittenden and Erin Rouchi, sophomores

"Malcom in the Middle because they are crazy, fun-loving troublemakers." - Lauren Gher, sophomore

What has changed since you went to high school?

"We had open campus and we got to leave all the time. Also, if the administration thought that your skirt was too short, they would measure from the top to the bottom with a ruler and if it was too short, they would send you home." - Ms. Leslie Stipe

"A calculator that had the basic functions was about $100 to buy. Instead, we used slide rulers for our calculations." - Mr. Jeffrey Kollar

"Popped collars. Also, today no one has a concept of rock and roll." - Mr. Kenneth Dowdy

"We did not have spirit days. Football games were not the cool thing to do. Another thing is that we had old school texting. We used our pagers and sent codes to people. For example, '401' meant 'I need information.'" - Ms. Sarah Kush

What makes junior year so hard?

"Never ending homework assignments. I always feel like I'm just barely hanging on, hoping I will make it 'till the end." - Margaret Sack, junior

"Junioritis; I'd find a cure, but I have too much homework." - Dooniya Shaikh, Katherine Schroeder, Kathryn Trelease, juniors

Senior Soiree is

Senior Soiree is a celebration that seniors have taken their last high school final exam, or so it was in years past. This was the first senior class in several years to take second semester finals. When asked about the change, Caitlin Collins, senior, said, "This is a time that should be rewarding, but everyone still had a good time." Instead of celebrating the end of finals, they were now saying goodbye to their fellow seniors graduating early.

While the reason for celebrating changed, some aspects of Senior Soiree such as the Mr. Duke competition, remained constant. Mr. Duke is typically a male senior who proved he was worthy of the title by demonstrating his school spirit. The contest consists of the competitors displaying their swim wear, speaking about why they feel they deserve to become Mr. Duke, and demonstrating a talent that they possess. There is also a question and answer session.

Many of the boys competed for Mr. Duke because the prize was a pair of prom tickets. Seth Origiano, winner of the 2007 Mr. Duke contest, discussed his feelings about the competition: "I first thought that there were many competitors and that I would have no chance." The competition was steep, and everyone performed well. Senior Soiree was a night of fun; no one was tied to one specific date, and people danced, ate and had a great time. This formal event was held at the Diplomat and gave seniors a chance to spend one last together as the Class of 2007.

Thank You...

Stephannie For being your scandalous self with your cubby filled with hair products. And scrambling to get spreads in, even when they weren't yours.

Kristina For being such an amazing Sports Editor and putting out flawless spreads. And name lists. Your organization is a legend!

Monica For doing the spreads that always seemed to cause the most trouble. You got them done, and they all turned out great!

Dana (and Mike) For letting us assign you double work- we know you had some help!

John For being the only boy in the middle of all us crazy girls. Thanks for being our eye candy!

Madelaine For entertaining us with that great calendar in the lab. And for cracking lots of jokes, you always kept us laughing!

Catherine For dealing with our philosophy "just give it to Catherine." And for your One Tree Hill obsession.

Kelly C. Without your hilarious recruitment posters, we wouldn't have any staff members next year! You turned out great spreads.

Riya For offering to do any awful job we could think of with a smile on your face. We never could have done it without you!

Nina For always coming in with a cheerful disposition- even in the midst of crazy deadlines, you were always poised and calm.

Courtney G. For getting so angry at the computers you swore. And for all your gossip and sensible shoes! You were such a great Photo Editor! And for all those name lists.

Liz For the amazing pictures you took at football games. All your connections really helped this year!

Lillian For always being so nice when we constantly bothered you about spreads! You always pulled through with terrific spreads!

Amelia For all your amazing creative ideas at the beginning of the year! They were great, and really helped!

Erin For devoting your lunch periods to the yearbook! You always did whatever we asked of you with a smile on your face!

Jenna For your songs about your ex that Ms. P loved so much and for never failing to entertain us, especially with that incredible

"Best of Boybands" cd!

Kathleen For being so sweet! And for your seemingly never-ending quest to find the perfect Snowball pictures, the spread looks great thanks to your dedication!

Kelly M. For doing every job we stuck you with- especially all that work with the copy machine. And for your amazing clothes!

Sarah M. For being so sweet and ready to do whatever adventure we sent you on. If it weren't for sophomores, this book would never get printed!

Victoria For catching every detail we never would have seen- you're amazing and you did a great job as Senior Editor this year!

Courtney M. For poking your head in on all official editor business. Your spreads were always good, so we didn't mind the distraction- including those flying pencils!

Shannon For turning out such great quality spreads! And you always were ready run all our crazy errands!

Christine For turning out quality spreads. Especially your dream spread- the boys' cross country team!

Rakhi For dealing with the alternative copy that never seemed to end! You were a great Academics Editor!

Claire For always getting your work done- even when you left us for quite some time. You were a great Senior Editor, and we couldn't have done it without you!

Amanda For getting everyone quiet at the beginning of class with your cheerleader-skills voice! You were always so sweet, and thanks for organizing t-shirts!

Tracie For being a great Lifestyles and Academics Editor! Now we just have one question for you, how was your weekend?

Ms. P. For putting up with us- our missing deadlines, disorganization, everything- and still keeping a smile on your face. You were always there for us, including when it was after school and on all those weekends. Without you, there would be no book!

THE

As the year comes to a close, the chaos runs rampant and we anxiously await the end of another year. We learn that despite all this craziness everything will not always be the way we planned, but in the end, it all comes together. As we continue on to the next year of our lives, this same craziness will undoubtedly follow. The freshmen will no longer be at the bottom of the food chain; sophomores will face the hectic schedules that junior year brings; juniors gleam with excitement for their senior year to rule the school; and seniors are well on their way to college life and beyond. The craze that is our life can be scary and intimidating, but in the end it is what makes our lives beautiful. This lifestyle is unavoidable, so Welcome to the Madness!

COLLATION

Thirty staff members and advisor Isadora York Community High School yearbook press run 2329 copies. The $32 book. Herff Jones Yearbook Inc., located in M. fonts used in the book include: Function. Mr. Mark Bibel, Ms. Maureen Olsson.

dora Parrini worked with Herff Jones Printing Company and Lifetouch Prestige Portraits to produce the 74th edition of Y's Tales, the book. This yearbook served as a record of all that occurred during the 2006-2007 school year. The nine by twelve inch book had a cover purchased by 90% of the student body. The staff used nine computers with Adobe InDesign CS2 software to create the book. In Marcelline, Missouri printed the 273 page book on 100 pound Ermine paper. Four signatures of color compliment the book. The book is set in 12 point, Garamond, Function, Times. Special thanks to Ms. Diana Smith, Mr. Kevin Brown, Mr. David Creech, Mr. Jeffrey Hartman, Mr. Dory Holloway, Ms. Tracy Simpson, and all contributors to Y's Tales.
