PLANES

Fairfax County is conveniently located between two major airports: Washington Dulles International (IAD) in the west and Ronald Reagan Washington National (DCA) in the east. Baltimore-Washington International Thurgood Marshall (BWI) is about 45 miles away. With three great airport options, you can compare flights for both convenience and affordability.

TRAINS

Amtrak offers passenger rail service between Union Station in Washington, DC, and major eastern cities, with connections to other areas. The AutoTrain is available from Lorton, VA, to Sanford, FL. You can also take Amtrak's Northeast Regional line from parts of Southern Virginia (such as Lynchburg or Norfolk) straight to Burke Centre in Fairfax County.

Additionally, the Virginia Railway Express (VRE) offers rail service with two lines. One originates in Manassas and the other in Fredericksburg; both run to and from Union Station in Washington, DC, with five stops in Fairfax County.

AUTOMOBILES

Visitors who choose to drive to Fairfax County and the National Capital region can use four major interstates. I-66, I-95, I-395, and I-495 all run through Fairfax County and are the main transportation arteries by which many people arrive.

GETTING AROUND

METRORAIL AND METROBUS

Metrorail is not just a convenient way to access many of the region's most memorable attractions — it's part of the vacation experience itself! There are 10 Metrorail stations within Fairfax County, many of which also offer daily parking facilities and bicycle racks. In 2020, Metro plans to expand, adding additional stops in Reston and Herndon, as well as a stop at Washington Dulles International Airport. Metrobus operates routes in many parts of Fairfax County and at all Metrorail stations.

FAIRFAX CONNECTOR

Another great option for bus service is the Fairfax Connector, which provides service from many Metrorail stations as well as great attractions such as George Washington's Mount Vernon; the Smithsonian's National Air and Space Museum Steven F. Udvar-Hazy Center; and world-class shopping or dining in Tysons, the Mosaic District, Reston Town Center, and Springfield Town Center.

DRIVING AND BIKING

Another wonderful perk of Fairfax County is the abundance of convenient parking. In many cases, parking is available at no charge. Northern Virginia is also known for its amazing bike trails. There are over 500 miles of bike trails in Fairfax County alone. Explore quiet, tree-lined streets and trails using Fairfax County's excellent interactive map of biking routes.
