HOODOOS

A hoodoo is a tall, thin spire of rock that sticks up from the ground. They range in size from the height of an average human to heights exceeding a 10-story building. For millions of years, hoodoo shapes have been alternating hard and soft rock layers with various mineral deposits within that give them vibrant coloring throughout their height. Shapes are formed through the erosion of water and wind that continue to carve at the rocks today.

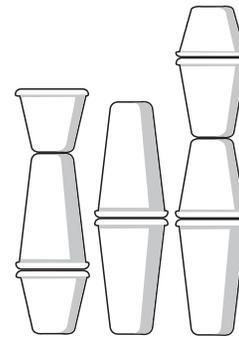

While hoodoos are scattered throughout the world, nowhere else are they so abundant as in Bryce Canyon National Park.

MAKE YOUR OWN HOODOOS AT HOME

Seeing the majesty of the hoodoos at Bryce Canyon National Park with your own eyes is an adventure that everybody should experience. While you wait for your family to plan their Bryce Canyon getaway, you can bring the hoodoos into your own house by building some for yourself.

Hoodoos can be made out of almost anything in your house, as long as you can stack it. Whether you use clay, pillows, or cups; your imagination is the only limitation when it comes to making homemade hoodoos.

Gather your supplies, and start building hoodoos. There's no right or wrong way, as long as you're having fun.

After you've successfully created your own hoodoo, we'd love to see it on social media. Tag @brycecanyoncountry and use the hashtag #homemadehoodoos
