What We Make Matters

*Our generations turn over,
but our art is forever*

With a legacy that stretches back dozens of generations and hundreds of years, the arts and crafts community helped put our mountain town on the map—and keep it there. In fact, it's through our art that we best preserve and tell the story of Gatlinburg.

While you're here, you have the opportunity to be a part of the story in more ways than just making a purchase. Take advantage of "You Create Classes" offered in various galleries or jump in on the class offerings at Hands on Gatlinburg, a yearly event hosted by the Great Smoky Arts & Crafts Community where guests like yourself can learn how to make crafts from local professionals. Or pay a visit to the Arrowmont School of Arts and Crafts, which is responsible for preserving so much of our arts and crafts heritage. This is your chance to be a part of something special. What are you waiting for?

ARTS & CRAFTS

Woods Hippensteal and Dan Gray

Art runs in our blood. Try as we might (and we have) we've yet to find a generation that hasn't contributed to the artistic culture of Gatlinburg in one way or another. Take Dan Gray and Woods Hippensteal for example. Dan now runs the world-famous outpost, Jim Gray Gallery, founded by his grandfather, Jim Gray. As the latest generation to run the gallery, Dan's on a mission to preserve Jim's legacy, while putting his own spin on things. For his part, Woods Hippensteal has begun to walk in his father's shoes in the Gallery while making a name for himself—separate from his artist father, Vern, whose watercolors have been bringing the Smokies to life for decades—via the surreal and unexpected. Together, both men are rearticulating for a new generation of Gatlinburg artists just what it means to create from a place of something.

Before Dan and Woods, there were the artists and crafts-people of the mountains. Those whose creations weren't just for show, but made out of necessity. When we think of the generations that came before ours, our minds naturally drift to the Arrowmont School of Arts and Crafts, a place that's done so much to not only preserve our artistic heritage, but to mold it into what it's become. Initially founded as a scholastic outpost by Pi Beta Phi Fraternity for Women, early teachers were thanked by local school children with handcrafted trinkets, including baskets and wood-carvings, made by their parents. This started a conversation about how to preserve and secure Appalachian crafting, and the rest, as they say, is history.
