Cliff Top Restaurant

Our Table Stays Set

Welcome to a safe haven for empty stomachs.

When we say there's something for everyone in Gatlinburg, we mean the odds of you leaving hungry are slim to none. With restaurants on either side of the Parkway and then some, there's no shortage of barbecue joints, comfort food kitchens or sweet shops for the whole family to enjoy. The only problem is having to choose.

If we had to nudge you in one direction or another, traditional homestyle cooking is the way to go. From collard greens and meat-and-three plates to everything fried under the sun, Gatlinburg has a knack for southern delicacies.

Whatever your palette desires, the eats in Gatlinburg are ones you'll really want to write home about. From savory to sweet, you'll have more than enough options to fuel up for an action-packed day. Whether you opt for a hand-selected steak and signature salad, southern-inspired barbeque, or a mountainous stack of Gatlinburg's staple breakfast pancakes, make sure to bring your appetite along for the adventure.

And while we could write pages and pages about the rest of the restaurants that keep us satisfied (we actually have several following this), we'd be remiss not to mention the full-on celebrations that make Gatlinburg a don't-miss foodie destination.

Scan for details.

GATLINBURG PANCAKE WEEK

The flapjack has quite the history here in Gatlinburg, so it's only right we spend a full seven days a year honoring it fork-in-hand. Back in the early 1900s, the breakfast staple became popular among the local logging community, proving to be a hearty meal for hungry lumberjacks. And while the logging business eventually came to a close, the humble pancake lived on. In 1960, the Gerding family opened The Pancake Pantry—the first restaurant in the state dedicated to the dish—and, since then, six other pancake houses have started serving up their own unique stack. That's one pancake house for every day of the week. Convenient!

GATLINBURGER WEEK

If you thought one week dedicated to a single food was enough, you must not be from around here. GatlinBURGER Week is another special seven days out of the year when local restaurants sling their best burger for just $9, all while contending for the highly renowned title of GatlinBURGER Burgermeister. Passports are available for residents and visitors alike to plan their Tour de Meat, and the rest of the rules are simple. Be nice. Be patient. Be generous to those feeding you. And don't forget to post your favorite #GatlinBURGER on your socials!

The Park Grill

ONLY IN GATLINBURG

What makes Gatlinburg, Gatlinburg? We're glad you asked. While we might seem like a simple mountain town from afar, we think you'll see that there's a lot here that you won't soon find anywhere else.

THE TOP DOG

For 40 years, Fannie Farkle's has been serving up family fun, games and the legendary Ogle Dog, a footlong delicacy named after one of Gatlinburg's founders. You might wonder what makes this corn dog so much better than the rest, but the recipe is one well-kept secret that's staying put in the Smokies.

SUGAR & A SHOW

You don't often get a behind-the-scenes look at how your favorite candies come to be, but since 1939, Aunt Mahalia's has been making from-scratch sweets in a glass-enclosed kitchen for all to see. After one taste, you'll realize how Gatlinburg's "original" candy store has managed to stick around for so long.

JELLY IS OUR JAM

Smoky Mountain Farms Jelly House is reimagining preservatives in ways you never thought possible. From Huckleberry and Boysenberry to corn cob and Moonshine, there are over 80 exciting varieties to choose from. Thankfully, the free samples make the choice a little bit easier.

SOAK IN THE SMOKIES

All-natural and all handmade here in Gatlinburg, the craft soaps, lotions and creams from Misty Mountain Soap Co. are the product of a local mom-and-daughter duo dedicated to healthier skincare. Swing by their workshop to see why they were deemed worthy of Tripadvisor's "Travelers' Choice Award."

STANDOUT SOUVENIRS

The Great Smoky Arts and Crafts Community is alive and well, and Cliff Dwellers is proof of that. Since 1933, the gallery has been showcasing local artisans' work, from paintings and pottery to handwoven linens and baskets, making it a treasure trove of truly exceptional keepsakes.
