Ole Smoky Moonshine

Here's to the Here and Now

Who's ready to wet their whistle?
We're pouring.

If these hills could talk, they'd definitely have a thing or two to say about our rebellious past. Because here in the heart of the Smokies, we have a strong heritage in bootlegging. It began in the mid-1700s when the Irish and Scots brought their whiskey-distilling ways with them overseas. For years, the drink flowed in these hills without so much as a hiccup in operations but, eventually, the government imposed a hefty federal tax on the spirit, driving many to do their work in secret. So, under the veil of night, "moonshiners" continued their prohibited-yet-profitable craft for the sake of spirit enthusiasts everywhere.

But that's all off the record, of course. Now, with moonshine on the right side of the law, Gatlinburg has three (very public and very legal) distilleries in town—each with its own backstory, traditions, imaginative flavors and stillhouse tours the entire family can partake in.

Winemaking, on the other hand, doesn't have quite as glamorous a history in Gatlinburg. But that's not holding our local vintners back. Just embark on one of our two wine trails to see what we mean. Both Rocky Top and Gatlinburg Wine Trails have free tastings at each stop. Just grab your official Wine Trail Passport and you'll be ready to sample your way through the best vino the Smokies have to offer.

No matter where you choose to quench your thirst, you can guarantee that every glass, tumbler or shooter has been a labor of love by Gatlinburg locals. Bottoms up!
