DISTILLERIES & WINERIES

Cheers to white lightnin', white wine, and everything in between.

We've been distilling moonshine in Gatlinburg for a hair over 10 years. Legally, that is. In 2009, the Tennessee General Assembly approved the commercial making and selling of fermented unaged corn mash. But unofficially, we've been at it since the time of the early Scots-Irish settlers hundreds of years ago. Moonshine's popularity—and devil-may-care reputation—peaked during the prohibition, when locals saw an opportunity to cash in on the illicit drinking scene as a lucrative way to put food on the table. And boy did they. The going price for a gallon of moonshine was about $25, or over $325 when adjusted for inflation.

While those freewheeling days are long gone, the spirit of the early entrepreneurial distillers carries on in the (legal) work of Ole Smoky Moonshine, Sugarlands Distilling Company, and Tennessee Shine Co., among others in the area.

The history around winemaking in Gatlinburg can't boast quite the same bona fides—or profit margins—but local vintners are earning their stripes and becoming destination watering holes all their own. Much of this is owing to the inventive varietals offered, including muscadine, blackberry and strawberry wines, and even Loganberry wine. You'll find these local specialties at Sugarland Cellars, Bootleggers Homemade Wine, and Little Bear Winery.

However and wherever you choose to quench your thirst, the best part about drinkin' in Gatlinburg is... you're drinkin' a literal part of Gatlinburg with every sip or swig. We'll raise a glass to that.

Tennessee Shine Co.

It's about quality, not quantity, for the folks at Tennessee Shine Co. That's why you'll only find small-batch moonshine and whiskey with their name on it. Take their Moonshine History Tour for a little education before enjoying a free tasting. From classics like Tennessee Straight Bourbon Whiskey to the more playful Blue Houdini, TN Shine Co. sticks to family recipes that have been passed down for generations. So, whichever flavor you choose, you know you're going to be sipping something good.

As Tennessee's first legal moonshine distillery, Ole Smoky also knows a thing or two about what makes a good jar. Bring the whole family for a self-guided tour where you can check out their authentic copper stills in action. Then hunker down in the holler for a live bluegrass show every day from noon until dark to really round out the entire experience. We'd be surprised if you don't take a jar or two home—you won't find a smoother souvenir this side of the Smokies.
