6 TULSA'S NATIVE ROOTS

See the birthplace of Tulsa at Creek Nation Council Oak Park. The Muscogee people of Loov Pokv arrived in Indian Territory in 1836 during the Trail of Tears. In a ceremony proclaiming their arrival and establishing their new home, they placed the ashes from their original Alabama ceremonial fires at the base of a towering oak tree on a hill overlooking the Arkansas River. Here, they brought to life a new fire and began to rebuild and reestablish their tribal government. Known as Tulsa's first city hall, this site continues to be used for tribal gatherings by the Muscogee (Creek) Nation.

Life jackets save lives

Many boaters say they don't wear a life jacket because it is too hot, or it will mess up their tan line, or they are simply not comfortable. But, an accident happens without warning and usually after the accident, the life jackets are not within reach – stored in cabinets, trapped under the boat or floating far away in the water. We would like to remind boaters that it's important to wear a life jacket at all times on our lakes.

And remember...

BOAT SAFE, BOAT SMART, BOAT SOBER!
