CORRIE KREHBIEL

WINEMAKER

MISSION HILL FAMILY ESTATE

Growing up in the Okanagan Valley, Corrie Krehbiel developed a love of the land at an early age. As a 4th generation fruit farming family, her earliest memories were of the orchards she grew up in, where she was tasked with being the wildlife spotter and apple picker.

Corrie's passion for winemaking began with a summer job in high school, when she worked in the cellar at CedarCreek Estate Winery in Kelowna, under the apprenticeship of then Winemaker, Ann Sperling. After graduating, Corrie enrolled at the University of British Columbia, earning a Bachelor's of Science in Agriculture.

Corrie's growing enthusiasm for wine brought her to the burgeoning wine region of New Zealand, where she began a diploma in Viticulture and Enology. It was in New Zealand where Corrie first had the opportunity to put her education in practice as an apprentice at Helena Winery, near Christchurch.

Despite an incredible experience at Helena Winery, Corrie's mind was always wandering back to the Okanagan, where she grew up, knew the land, and understood its potential for making world class wine. In 2000, Corrie decided it was time to return to her roots. After a few years as winemaker at wineries all across the Okanagan, Corrie joined Mission Hill Family Estate in 2015, with the intention of putting the Okanagan on the map as one of the very best wine regions in the world.
