

LoCo Ale Trail

Virginians have been producing wine for more than 400 years but now the craft beer industry is making waves across the Commonwealth, including in Loudoun, which has more breweries than any county in Virginia. Old Dominion Brewing Company was Loudoun's first brewery in 1989 but it wasn't until 2011 when Lost Rhino Brewing Company opened its doors that the beer scene began to truly emerge.

Today, experience hundreds of craft brews across 30-plus breweries along the LoCo Ale Trail. Loudoun pairs modern breweries along its urban eastern corridor with rural breweries in the west that are situated on farms and pastures nestled at the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Loudoun's breweries match their local surroundings as places like Beltway Brewing, Old Ox Brewery and Ocelot Brewing Company in the east offer large tasting rooms and refreshing beers close to Washington DC while further west, Dirt Farm Brewing and Old 690 Brewing Company offer visitors a chance to see firsthand where the hops and the beer's other ingredients are grown.

The agricultural side of beer production is an integral part of Loudoun's beer story. In 2015 the Mid-Atlantic's first commercial hops processing facility opened at Black Hops Farm, which is now also home to Vanish Farmwoods Brewery and Pilot Malt House. Virginia's climate, soil and landscape make it ideal for growing hops, and Black Hops Farm helps expand supply not only to breweries in Loudoun, but up and down the East Coast.

The LoCo Ale Trail features itineraries that allow beer enthusiasts to enjoy the breweries in a multitude of ways. The Farm Breweries itinerary guides travelers through scenic tasting rooms where the ingredients are grown onsite while the Brews by Bike highlights breweries along the Washington & Old Dominion Trail.
