

Like a photograph, each bottle of wine captures a moment in time, providing an image of the land, weather, and across Northern California grown by farmers who believe in protecting and sustaining the earth and who value their vineyard workers. We allow this exceptional fruit to speak for itself by employing minimal intervention in the cellar.

Subject To Change produces natural wines, and has partnered with incredible growers, who farm organic or Biodynamic grapes. The fruit in the cellar are not manipulated, which gives the wines character, much like the folks who grow them. They’re ethereal, full of energy & potentially quirky - but that’s how they like it. If done just right, the juice will be a window into those pieces of land cherished by our growers.

Côte refers to a hillside, seashore, border, or one of those rare sloped regions that are home to the world’s most interesting vineyards. Their grapes originate from distinct California sites, yet their practices resemble those more commonly found in Burgundy: early picked to ensure lively acidity and lower alcohol, and minimized sulfur and other additions. Côte West brings the best of these worlds together.
