Standing nearly five feet tall with a wingspan of seven to eight feet, the majestic whooping crane is named for its resonant “whooping” call, which can be heard for up to two miles away. They use the call to indicate danger, mating and flight.

Whooper Winter Texans

Each fall, the only self-sustaining wild population of whooping cranes migrates south from their summer nesting grounds in Canada’s remote Wood Buffalo National Park to their traditional wintering grounds in the warm, shallow marshes in and near the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge. The cranes start arriving in October after completing the 2,500-mile journey, which can take up to 50 days. They start their long journey back to Canada in March, after a winter of feasting on such delicacies as insects, berries and their favorite meal — blue crabs.

Dance of the Whooper

Whooping cranes form pairs at the age of two or three years. Courting pairs bond through the performance of an elaborate dance, which consists of leaps, wing flaps, head tosses and flinging of feathers, grass and other small items. They are monogamous and mate for life, but will accept a new mate if one dies.

“This winter you have an opportunity to experience the whooping cranes, the birds of superlative; the tallest and one of the loudest birds of our continent, one of the rarest birds worldwide, and without a doubt, one of the most fascinating — cloaked in glistening white with black wingtips and a red cap, dancing, dueting, and like the rest of us, relishing blue crabs.”

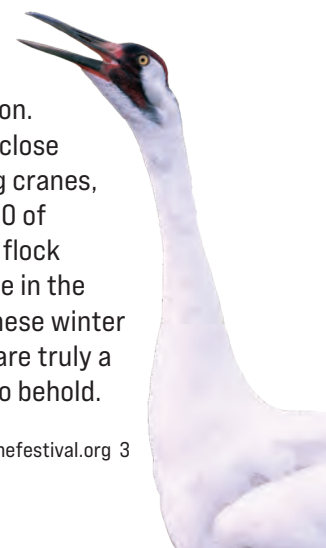

— George Archibald, Co-founder, International Crane Foundation

Conservation Efforts

The endangered whooping crane represents one of the most well-known conservation stories in the United States. Habitat loss and unregulated hunting reduced the crane’s numbers from an estimated 10,000 before European settlement of North America to about 1,300 by 1870. By the 1940s, there were fewer than 20 birds in the wild. Since then, public awareness and intensive international conservation efforts have rescued the bird from the brink of extinction. Today there are close to 800 whooping cranes, an estimated 500 of which are in the flock that winters here in the Coastal Bend. These winter whooper wings are truly a welcome sight to behold.
