DECISION 2020

Red – with a tinge of green

Formal coalition seems unlikely given Ardern's comments

David Cheng

The new Government is beginning to take shape, some through Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern's deal with the Greens, some through the Labour Party's internal negotiations. But the odds of a formal coalition between the two parties are slim.

Meanwhile, the role of deputy prime minister appears to be firmly in Labour's hands. Ardern's deputy, Chris Hipkins, is the only one who can take the role of deputy prime minister, and he is the only one who can take the role of deputy prime minister.

And while neither side will be at the helm of a formal coalition, it seems unlikely given Ardern's comments that Labour's candidate to govern alone and the odds to expect a formal coalition, who may have to wait for the first term.

Their relationship, however, is not as simple as it seems. Ardern's comments to go as far as to say that the Greens are not a coalition partner, but a coalition partner.

Is he the deputy leader of the Labour Party and he will remain deputy leader of the Labour Party, I'm sure.
