

The Art Lover's Guide to Collecting Fine Art in North Carolina

North Carolina is undoubtedly a place of rich history and artistic tradition. The diversity of the landscape also attracts inspired artists, and is home to an array of galleries and museums. Small towns border the western region of the state that backs up to the Smoky and Blue Ridge mountains, while the middle region contains the largest cities and many urban attractions. The coast offers charming waterfront towns and endless stretches of beach.

One of the most popular art destinations of North Carolina is the cultural hub of Charlotte, located in the middle region of the state. Art adventurers will find a slew of museums such as the Bechtler Museum of Modern Art, Mint Museum Uptown and the Mint Museum Randolph, the first original branch and first art museum in North Carolina, along with the Harvey B. Gantt Center for African-American Arts + Culture.

Also in Charlotte is the unforgettable Festival in the Park, occurring every September, with 2022 dates set for September 23 to 25. Attendees enjoy art, music and food throughout Freedom Park. The same organizers also host the Kings Drive Art Walk, their October dates marking their 11th annual event. Held along the Little Sugar Creek Greenway, visitors can enjoy arts, crafts, music and entertainment.

Heading slightly to the east is the capital city of Raleigh, which is also home to astounding museums such as the North Carolina Museum of Art and the Contemporary Art Museum of Raleigh, both serving up rotating exhibitions.

To the west of the state, visitors will revel in the delights of the city of Asheville. The Downtown Asheville Arts District (DAAD) features an eclectic scene with over 30 members, the Asheville Art Museum, along with great culinary treats, music and views of the Appalachian Mountains. The River Arts District is also a popular destination that houses artists studios and galleries. The district also holds gallery walks on the second Saturday of every month, where there are demos, workshops, live music and food.

When visiting, don't forget to also check out the work of North Carolina artists such as Jeri Greenberg, from the town of Leland, and the animal and wildlife paintings of Angela Alexander out of Asheville. Don't miss out on all the great art adventures to be had!

Angela Alexander started painting in 2004, with dogs as her primary subjects. Over the past few years, she's expanded to include other animals. "2021 has been the year of the bears for me," Alexander says. "Bears represent strength and courage, which so many of us need to survive this pandemic."

She continues, "During a creative moment where I lost track of time and everything around me, 'Mama Bear' appeared. I was so fascinated by her and asked, 'Where did you come from?' She's unlike anything I had painted previously—more muted colors with lots of texture. She set me on a path that has become a new creative journey."

These bears are truly a gift, teaching Alexander not to limit herself and to pay attention to the hidden things. The bears are visible, as well as a bit hidden within her brushstroke, just as they are in the wild.

JERI GREENBERG

Jeri Greenberg loves finding the extraordinary in the ordinary. Seeing the beauty in everyday objects and the people around her is what excites and spurs her work.

"It's obvious I'm not a painter of trees and lakes, the landscape doesn't call to me as it does to countless others," she says. "I've always seen differently and wanted to be seen differently. I want viewers of my work to know it's my style when they see it." Collectors often tell Greenberg that no matter the subject matter, they know her mark making.

Greenberg also loves using pastels and is now experimenting with mixed media as well. "I use thick juicy marks of broken color laid next to each other, not on top, to add dimension and interest," she says. "My inspiration comes from seeing the colors of these items up close, whether I'm finding the nuances in a piece of fruit or the hidden colors in a skin tone. I hope my excitement shows through in my work and the stories my paintings tell."
