

10 Historic Inns In New England That Feel Like An Autumn Wonderland

By Purity Gacheri

Be enchanted by an autumnal wonderland at these historic New England inns in the fall, which are cozy, beautiful, and rich in history.

Autumn is the time for leaf peeping, and New England's scenic fall drives and road trips beckon. When the heat of summer starts dissipating, many travelers can't help but start packing and preparing to embark on their fall foliage itineraries. Thankfully, New England is not short of stunning fall foliage spots that allow visitors to have the ultimate autumnal experience with the colorful phenomenon. And the region even has more to offer.

New England is one of the most historic places in the US. A good fall trip to the region would include stepping back in time at historic sites that afford spectacular views of fall foliage. Whether it is hiking Boston's Freedom Trail or discovering the colonial architecture in Newport Historic District, there are many ways to get the best of both worlds in this region.

But, of course, for an enchanting fall vacation in New England, staying at old-world inns and hotels is the perfect solution to amp up the autumn magic. For those intending to stay overnight while exploring this scenic part of the United States, here are some of the best historic inns in New England that feel like an autumn wonderland.

8 Weekapaug Inn, Westerly, Rhode Island

This historic inn dates back to 1899. It is located on the Rhode Island shoreline overlooking Quonochontaug Pond and the Atlantic Ocean. Guests are treated to breathtaking views of rich fall foliage, plus the contrast between the changing leaves and the blue waters is spectacular.

- Address: 25 Spray Rock Rd, Westerly, RI 02891
- Amenities: Fitness center, outdoor lap pool, valet parking, beverages and snacks, housekeeping
- Pet-friendly: Yes