

TRAVEL✈️NOIRE

An Ultimate Guide To Taking a New England Fall Road Trip

By Sarah Rand | Nov 22, 2023

New England is a Northeastern region of the United States. It comprises many different areas that offer travelers different experiences. The six New England states each have unique charm and characteristics that would make a road trip to the region that much more enticing. The refreshing Atlantic coastline, forest-filled mountains, and famous fall foliage are just a few of the reasons that millions of people travel to New England each year.

Fall in New England is a sight to behold. Everywhere people look is filled with vivid color from the falling leaves, and with each passing day, the thriving surrounding nature makes itself known. Nothing beats this region in the fall, especially during the season's peak in late September and early October. Whether visitors are looking to enjoy the natural beauty, Halloween thrills or serene communities of the region, there is a state that paints the perfect backdrop. Learn about the best things to see and do in each New England state during an epic road trip.

Things To Do

Rhode Island

The next stop on the round trip around New England is the seaside destination of Providence, Rhode Island. Providence, Rhode Island, is around one hour away from Boston, Massachusetts, by car. The capital city, Providence, is a rich cultural hub with a particular appreciation for art and cuisine. Providence is known for its friendly community, the serene Providence River and its small-town charm.

Since Providence, Rhode Island is right on the water, it would be a shame to miss out on all the aquatic fun. Travelers visiting Providence enjoy paddling on the river and taking in all the surrounding sights. With ombre leaves falling from every direction, the river provides a steady journey beside the forest with surprisingly great city skyline views. For travelers wanting to taste the local cuisine of Providence, there are plenty of restaurants close by to help regain energy after paddling. Black Sheep, a Black-owned brunch and American cuisine restaurant, hosts nightly entertainment in a cozy neighborhood spot. The restaurant is very welcoming and inclusive; it's even known for its weekly drag events.