July is one of the busiest months for travel, with most of the Northern Hemisphere entering full summer vacation mode. And this year packs an extra special punch, with many destinations opening up for the first time since the start of the pandemic. We know you're probably itching for a sun-filled holiday either close to home or far away, so we've gathered up a list of places that cover the geographical gamut. Whether you want to see wildflowers in Glacier National Park or go on safari in Botswana, here are 9 of the best places to travel in July.

Newport, Rhode Island

Newport comes alive in July, with a trio of big-name festivals keeping locals and tourists busy all month long: The Newport Regatta (July 10-11), Newport Folk Festival (July 23-28), and the Newport Jazz Festival (July 30-August 1). The city is no stranger to luxe hotels, but we're particularly excited about the top-to-bottom transformation of The Vanderbilt, Auberge Resorts Collection, which will be unveiled this summer. The 33-room resort, housed in a former mansion, will get even more glamorous with revived public spaces, including the lobby area and restaurants. Or book a stay at Brenton Hotel, which has a new “Pick Your Pastime” summer package series that allows guests to experience Newport-esque activities like private cruises, a round of golf, attending a polo match, and mansion tours.
