The United States' first apple orchard was planted in 1625 near Boston's Beacon Hill. Today there are more than 7,500 growers producing apples across all 50 states (according to the U.S. Apple Association). That's 240 million bushels of apples each year. To help with the harvest, many orchards open their gates for visitors to come and pick their own, often with added autumn entertainment.

7 JASWELL'S FARM Smithfield, RI

About thirty miles outside Providence, located in the heart of "Apple Valley" in Smithfield, Rhode Island, the Jaswell family thanks guests for choosing their "family friendly and farm-fresh" orchard for the pick-your-own-apples fall tradition. Each member of the party can select one extra apple to enjoy on their ride home! Reservations for apple picking in the orchard are required, and guests receive instructions and a bag for apple picking.
