

THE EVERYGIRL

Travel

Where You Should Travel Next, Based on Your Favorite Book

February 14, 2025 written by LAUREN BLUE

Some books inspire you to reinvent your life; others send you spiraling into internet rabbit holes to research historical events, but one of my favorite genres is the kind that has you looking up plane tickets the second you finish. These books have such vivid settings that they feel as essential to the story as the characters. Even if the world is entirely fictional, they make me desperate to visit. I've tried immersive reading experiences with thematic playlists and TV backgrounds, but these can only transport you so far. Instead of settling for shabby recreations, why not plan a trip to experience your favorite book setting IRL? Here's where you should travel next based on your favorite book.

2. The Wedding People by Alison Espach: Newport, Rhode Island

Source: Amazon

Source: Raul De Los Santos | Unsplash

The Wedding People was one of my favorite reads this year, and the moment I finished it, I was on Google tracking flights to Rhode Island. While the luxury hotel in the book might be out of reach, Newport has plenty to offer without the thousand-dollar-a-night price tag.

Head to Bowen's Wharf and Bannister's Wharf for shopping, waterfront scenery, and a lobster roll. After a little retail therapy, tour one of the town's famous Gilded Age mansions. The Breakers, a 138,300-square-foot "summer cottage" built by the Vanderbilts, is a must-see. If you're feeling adventurous, walk along The Cliff Walk, the same trail Phoebe visits in the book. In the evening, hop aboard a sunset cruise to admire Newport's beauty from the water.