

Where to See the Best Fall Colors in the Northeast USA

Rhode Island

- Roger Williams Park, Providence
- Cliff Walk, Newport

The fall season brings color and crisp weather; pumpkins, apples and corn mazes; fall festivals and so much fun to the Northeast. You'll want to visit for all of it, but it will be the breathtaking views and vibrant fall foliage that will make those indelible memories. Read to to learn where you can get your fix of experiences and fall colors in the northeast region of the United States.

Rhode Island

Rhode Island also hits peak colors in early to mid-October. Plan a trip to this tiny East Coast state then.

Roger Williams Park, Providence

Located on more than 435 acres, Roger Williams Park is a great place to visit for leaf-peeping. Stroll through the park, have a picnic, go boating and enjoy the fall colors. There's much to do in this park that was established in the 1870s.

Cliff Walk, Newport

If you haven't done the Newport Cliff Walk, that's another good possibility for seeing fall colors — and taking a good stroll. It's about 3.5 miles long and winds past the ocean and breathtaking estates.